Historical Note

The Paralegal Program, formerly known as the Lawyer's Assistant Program, was added as a University of San Diego School of Law certificate program in 1975. It was a twelve week course in which students studied introductory law and selected an area of emphasis: litigation, real estate and mortgages, corporations and estates, or trusts and wills. The National Center for Legal Training worked with the USD School of Law and Dean of Graduate and Continuing Education, Raymond Brandes, to offer this type of Lawyer's Assistant training program. The program was thought to bring legal costs down by providing trained assistants to help lawyers with their work. In 1975 only six other universities offered this kind of program. Classes in the Lawyer's Assistant Program were also endorsed by the American Bar Association.

The Paralegal Program continues to be a certificate program in the USD School of Law, offering day and night courses with a range of emphasis areas.
