Historical Note

Part of the onboarding process for new employees at the University of San Diego was to provide a New Employee Orientation. This Orientation was formatted to help new employees get acquainted with the University. In 1991, the New Employee Orientation was held on two days and was organized into sections on University Relations and Internal Procedures. As the department overseeing staff relations, Human Resources administered the new employee orientation.

This was the New Employee Orientation binder of Linda Nottoli upon her hiring as Secretary in University Relations.

Scope and Content Note

This collection consists of binder materials from the 1991 New Employee Orientation. Materials include handouts, forms, handbooks, and department information. While some department information is scarce, sections such as the Capital Campaign, Development, and University Relations contain promotional materials and brochures for the University. These records give a snapshot into what New Employees learned at the outset of their time at USD.
