Cultivate Conscious Kids:

Unique Youth Leadership Development Programming

Regardless of what divides us as a global community, whether it be location, religion, ethnicity, politics, etc., it is generally agreed upon that the future of our increasingly complex world lies in the hands of our youth. As we, the current decision makers in society, continue to add to the complexities of this world, we also have the responsibility to empower the youth of today with the proper tools to navigate not only their current realities but also the complex local, national, and global concerns they will quickly inherit as they grow into adulthood. Developing young people’s ability to tap into their own leadership potential, regardless of their role in a given situation, is the key to their success as they mature and take on the complexities at hand. This is especially relevant now, as we are in the midst of an increasingly tumultuous time, which was only exacerbated by the November 2016 United State Presidential election, in which “the country’s first female major-party candidate lost to a man whose campaign was dogged by charges of sexism and xenophobia” (Gross, 2017).

While the need for youth development on a global scale is overwhelming to say the least, the idea of starting on a national, state, or local level is much more accessible, as evidenced by the multitude of programs currently in existence across the United States. A quick Google search for “youth leadership development programs in the United States” populates 21.8 million responses in less than one second. A similar search for “youth leadership development programs in California” populates 2.28 million responses in less than one second. Finally, a search for “youth leadership development programs in San Diego” populates over 800,000 responses also in less than one second. It is, of course, important to take into account that not every one of those responses represents a youth leadership development program. It does however indicate that the topic is being discussed at each of those levels, and it is being mentioned quite a bit. The Environmental Scan included in this paper takes a deeper look into a number of youth leadership programs at the national, state, and local levels. Each program has a slightly different focus or approach to youth leadership development programming.

A variety of research supports the market need for youth programming, such as leadership development, to supplement a young person’s classroom and experiential learning. Zarrett & Lerner (2008) refer to this type of program as an “out-of-school time” (OST) activity. The authors reference a study examining the role of the 4-H organization in promoting positive youth development. This study supports the existence and necessity of a variety of OST activities. Their research found that youth who participated in several OST activities (up to 4 activities per week) “fare[d] better developmentally” (4) than their peers who either participated in one or no OST activities per week.

The works of Zarrett & Lerner as well as the 4-H organization are continually referenced throughout this paper. For example, the 4-H (San Diego location) is explored as a local youth leadership development program in the Environmental Scan section of this paper. Additionally, this particular 4-H program is known for promoting the Five Cs of positive youth development framework, a concept proposed by Zarrett & Lerner (2008), which is explored as a framework to support the core purpose of this paper.

The findings of the OST activity study referenced by Zarrett & Lerner (2008) also indicate that, as early as the fifth grade, adolescents had participated in an average of two and one-half different types of OST activities at least a few times a year. By seventh grade, 61% were participating in at least two OST activities once a week or more (3).

The high levels of participation in OST activities imply there is a market demand for high quality OST activities. This demand may be positively affected by the parallel need for youth leadership development programs to prepare the current youth for the realities of today and the challenges of tomorrow. Whether its parents hoping to equip their children for the future, high school students looking for that “special something” to gain admission into the college of their dreams, or perhaps this generation seeks something “more” than the traditional team sport - whatever the reason may be youth leadership development programs are continuing to rise in popularity.

While I was unable to find any statistics, current or historical, on the number of youth leadership programs in existence, I was able to identify an increase in the academic research being done on the topic. By using the multidisciplinary journal database EBSCOhost, I searched seven relevant databases for articles published in 1996, 2006, and 2016. I based the searches on the following search terms: youth leadership development, youth leadership, leadership development, and youth development. The results of this comparison support my claim that the number of articles published in scholarly journals has increased over the last 20 years. See Appendix A for the details of my findings.
Grow Great Girls: A Response

The Center for Women’s Leadership within the School of Leadership and Education Sciences at the University of San Diego launched a program called Grow Great Girls in the summer of 2016. This program was only the beginning of a response to the market and societal demands mentioned above. Grow Great Girls strives to meet these market and societal demands through quality leadership development programming uniquely designed to meet the needs of a specific population – youth. Grow Great Girls began as “a mother-daughter leadership experience, uniquely designed to build girls' personal confidence, self-esteem and social capacity” for mothers and their daughters between the ages of 9-14.

The marketing, outreach, and program design was launched in May of 2016, in preparation for an 8-hour event on August 19, 2016. Registration reached just under 100 participants registered, double the original goal, weeks before the event and forced the team to close registration due to facilities restraints. The response from those involved in the program was generally positive as evidenced by participant surveys, facilitation team debrief, and the fact of surpassing registration goals. The momentum of the program continued into October 2016 when the organization partnered with Ivivva, UTC to co-host Ivivva’s Dreams & Goals workshop on University of San Diego campus. A group of over 40 women and their daughters gathered from across southern California to enjoy 30 minutes of yoga followed by a small group facilitated Dreams & Goals workshop to guide participants through translating their dreams into reachable goals. In winter of 2016, Grow Great Girls programs grew to include Build the Best Boys. The peer programing was launched in a gender inclusive 7th grade classroom setting, with similar plans for the 5th grade in the spring of 2017.

The Grow Great Girls organization, which has evolved into Cultivate Conscious Kids, is on the brink of expanding to a larger range of audiences with initial plans of launching two more Grow Great Girls workshops and a Build the Best Boys, mother and son leadership experience in the summer of 2017. The idea to create more specialized Grow Great Girls sessions was inspired by the feedback received from the first couple of events. Both mothers and daughters wanted an opportunity to delve deeper into a few very relevant issues facing our girls today; social media, body image, and self esteem as well as finding your voice through powerful communication. Instituting Build the Best Boys was also a response to feedback received from participants and the facilitation team. While the expertise of the Center for Women’s Leadership remains in women and girls’ leadership, the team is expanding to include experts on boys’, and one day men’s, leadership developmental needs and capacities. This is critical as the portfolio of programs grows to include all genders within various systems and contexts. (See Appendix B for more detail on the expansion of the Cultivate Conscious Kids programs and Appendix C for more detail on the systems addressed by the Cultivate Conscious Kids programming.) As this expansion continues, the organization must remain committed to a core foundation in order to maintain impactful, meaningful, and sustainable programming.

This paper strives to provide a foundation supported by a theoretical framework to guide the Cultivate Conscious Kids programs through future expansion and generation of new programs to include all youth, regardless of gender, and in a variety of settings or systems, as shown in Appendix D. This foundation will take into account the following: the theoretical framework provided by the concept of the Five Cs of positive youth development (Zarrett & Lerner, 2008), the definition of leadership with its foundation of adaptive leadership supported by Cultivate Conscious Kids organization, a particular approach to facilitation, the curriculum followed in the past programs as well as the feedback received from those events.

Theoretical Framework

Zarrett & Lerner (2008) suggest the term “positive youth development encompasses psychological, behavioral, and social characteristics that reflect what [developmental scientists] call ‘Five Cs.’” (1). The Five Cs are comprised of competence, confidence, connection, character, and caring/compassion. See Appendix E for further explanation of each of the Five Cs. A young person is considered to be “thriving” when they have developed in each of the Five Cs. The authors continue to describe a sixth “C”: contribution (to self, family, community, and civil society)”, which can only begin to develop once the Five Cs are mastered. The Five Cs of positive youth development is infused into the curriculum of each of the Cultivate Conscious Kids programs in order to empower youth to master the Sixth C, which is known to the Cultivate Conscious Kids program as leadership.

A Unique View of Leadership

The Cultivate Conscious Kids programs operate on the premise that “we don’t see leadership as something that you are,” explains Lorri Sulpizio, PhD, director of the Center for Women’s Leadership, and creator of the original Grow Great Girls idea. “We see it as something that you do. Anybody can do it. We take away the role piece, so you can be a leader without being a manager or CEO” (Gross, 2017). At its core, the message of the Grow Great Girls programs is simple, “get to know your story,” as explained by Sulpizio. “Understand it. Then you can write your own ending.”

The Cultivate Conscious Kids programs’ unique view of leadership is rooted in the core “Principle of Practice” of its original overarching organization, Conscious Leadership Academy, which was formally known as The Leadership Institute. This principle is set forth on the organization's published website,

Our leadership development programs are based on the assumption that leadership can be learned, and therefore taught. The work of the [Conscious Leadership Academy] is rooted in bringing the development of the whole person to the teaching and practice of leadership. Our leadership development approach rests on three principles:

- People learn best by experience.
- To make experiential evidence useful requires giving people the conceptual tools to organize the evidence. It also requires fostering their capacity to develop such tools.
- The form of teaching should communicate the same message as the material. We seek to practice what we teach.

The influence of these three principles positively contributes to the success of the Cultivate Conscious Kids mission by offering guidance and inspiration for the design and execution of the youth leadership development programming. The alignment of the guiding principles of the Cultivate Conscious Kids programs, which includes the unique definition of leadership, Conscious Leadership Academy’s “Principle of Practice,” and the following proposed facilitation style will increase the impact of the program on the its participants. (Iachini, Bell, Lohman, Beets, & Reynolds, 2017).

A Particular Approach to Facilitation

The impact of developmental programming increases when participants experience positive self-esteem while engaging in that programming (Ryan & Deci, 2000). The Cultivate Conscious Kids organization strives to facilitate programming that creates opportunities for participants to experience positive self-esteem through developing each of the Five Cs by implementing a particular approach to facilitation.

In conjunction with the strength of the curriculum, the success of the Cultivate Conscious Kids programs lies in the integral role of the program facilitators. It is their job to embody a specific approach to facilitation while creating and maintaining a unique environment in order to best support the participants. The facilitation team’s beliefs around the purpose and outcome of the program can guide their interactions with participants of the program, and ultimately affect the opportunity for those participants to develop their own leadership capacity (Anderson-Butcher & Lawson, 2002; Iachini, Amorose, & Anderson-Butcher, 2010). In adopting an “autonomous supportive interpersonal” approach to facilitation, our team can empower each participant to develop their leadership capacity through interactive activities and reflection in an environment that empowers participants to take risks, experience self-esteem, and grow into their fullest selves as leaders. After working with facilitators who embody this approach, youth have been found to be more motivated and have enhanced well-being than their peers (Iachini, Bell, Lohman, Beets, & Reynolds, 2017). Mageau & Vellerand (2003) defined an “autonomous supportive interpersonal” approach to facilitation as follows, an individual in a position of authority (e.g., an instructor [or facilitator]) takes the other’s (e.g., a student’s [or a participant’s]) perspective, acknowledges the other’s feelings, and provides the other with pertinent information and opportunities for choice, while minimizing the use of pressure and demands. (p. 886)

Facilitating programming around the development of participants’ leadership capacity, as understood by Cultivate Conscious Kids organization, naturally leads to adopting an “autonomous supportive interpersonal” approach to facilitation. Sulpizio connects this concept to one of the motivations to launch the Grow Great Girls program, the original program that led to the creation of Cultivate Conscious Kids,

This piece around girls and women finding their voices and finding the courage to accomplish their goals, that just resonated. Especially in a world that still has a lot of gender bias and continue to present a lot of obstacles for girls and women (Gross, 2017).

In this light, Cultivate Conscious Kids programming aims to temporarily suspend the obstacles youth face in society to allow them to take risks and grow into their own leadership capacities. Lori Watson, PhD, chair of USD’s philosophy department and former director gender studies program, describes the obstacles the Grow Great Girls programs strive to suspend, Especially in the pre-teen group, where girls that assert themselves can be seen as bitchy or bossy. In that vulnerable age of wanting peer acceptance, girls may shy away from leadership to avoid gender stereotypes that don’t attach to boys in the same way (Gross, 2017).

As Cultivate Conscious Kids continues to expand to a larger audience, the organization must preserve its commitment to the “autonomous supportive interpersonal” approach to facilitation by customizing each iteration of future programming based on the needs of that particular group of participants.

In order to maximize positive youth development, the Cultivate Conscious Kids facilitation team must consider the Five Cs of positive youth development framework (Zarrett & Lerner, 2008) in conjunction with self-determination theory (Ryan & Deci, 2000) in both the design and implementation of the programming (Iachini, Bell, Lohman, Beets, & Reynolds, 2017). Self-determination theory states the environment, which in this case is created and held by the Cultivate Conscious Kids facilitation team, influences the extent to which the participants’ needs for autonomy, competence, and relatedness are satisfied. Ryan & Deci (2000) argue that healthy youth development, including one’s leadership capacity, is directly promoted through the satisfaction of the above three needs. With this theory in mind, the Cultivate Conscious Kids facilitation team is ultimately tasked with creating an environment that allows for the work itself to fulfill the participants’ needs for autonomy, competence, and relatedness. The facilitation team can greatly contribute to the fulfillment of these needs through a deep understanding of the foundations of the programming, as well as a dedication to nuances of an “autonomous supportive interpersonal” approach to facilitation.

Existing Curriculum

See Appendix F for the guides used to aid the facilitation team in delivering the curriculum for the following programs: Grow Great Girls: August 19, 2016, Dreams & Goals, and Cultivate Conscious Kids: In-School Programming. Each program curriculum is infused with an attention to the Five Cs of positive youth development, the unique view of leadership, opportunities to experience positive self-esteem, autonomy, competence, and relatedness, as well as autonomous supportive interpersonal approach to facilitation.

Implications and Considerations from Feedback Received

The feedback received since launching the Cultivate Conscious Kids programs is an integral element of the programs’ foundation (See Appendix D). The following list includes how much of the feedback received has been acted upon:

- Movement, and experiential and hands-on learning is crucial to capturing audiences between the ages of 9-14. As programming evolves more of these types of activities will be included in each curriculum. The facilitation team took this into account based on their collective expertise, which was later reinforced by participant feedback and the facilitation team debrief.

- The majority of participants crave the opportunity to explore these topics and do this type of work, which makes it very important to plan enough time for debriefing after each activity. This desire for the opportunity to do this work is not only evidenced by participant experiences recounted by facilitators, participant feedback, and the article published in USD Magazine on the Grow Great Girls programs (See Appendix G). The facilitation team found that when given the opportunity even the most resistant participants would find value in the activities. Consider the following two examples:

- Before the August 19th Grow Great Girls program, one mother shared that her daughter had been horrifically bullied to the point that she had experienced rather serious physical symptoms of this level of stress. Her mother was hopeful that her daughter would be able to at least slightly engage with the other participants but offered that the team should not be concerned if she seemed extremely shy and slightly removed. The team decided that an additional facilitator would work with this girl’s group for a little extra support. This participant began the morning struggling to say even a word to her group members, and by the afternoon she was “tapping-in” to the Theater of the Empowered exercise (See Appendix F) and fully participating with a smile of confidence on her face.

- It became clear that one student was very resistant to the ConRez exercise that took place during the December 2016 In-School programming (See Appendix F). He shared that he thought, “the sentence structure was awkward and that he would sound stupid saying it, so [he’d] pass.” The facilitators thanked him for sharing his feedback, acknowledging that many new skills feel awkward when you are first learning them, and asked that he just give it a shot for today. After a long pause during the debrief at the end of the activity, this student shared that while he isn’t going to say the ConRez sentence structure in conversation, he does find it useful to organize his thoughts before approaching a challenging conversation.

• The above examples prove that the work done in the Cultivate Conscious Kids programs is impactful and appreciated. Further the post-experience participant surveys completed after the August 19th Grow Great Girls event indicated that the majority of respondents found that the event improved their leadership capacity and all respondents found that the event improved their connection with their daughter. The pre-experience surveys administered before the Cultivate Conscious Kids in school program showed how important group relations, performance, and genuine connection are to students in seventh grade.

• The participant feedback from all 2016 events indicated a need for programming around special topics, most popularly social media. The Cultivate Conscious Kids organization plans to host two programs in the summer of 2017 that include the topics of “Social Media, Self-Esteem and Body Image” and “Your Strongest Voice and Powerful Communication.”

• The feedback from participants as well as the facilitation team debrief indicated that the timeliness and preparedness of the team was much appreciated and contributed to the flow and success of the events. Some feedback pointed to shorter events with more breaks during the day, which the team will test out with the 2017 summer programs.
See Appendix G for the feedback received since launching the Grow Great Girls programs as well as a variety of program materials for reference.

Environmental Scan

As mentioned, the Environmental Scan takes a deeper look into a number of youth leadership programs at the national, state, and local levels, which you will find in Appendix H. A few patterns emerged from this scan. Firstly, the programs examined all defined leadership as connected to a role or activity, which is the first differentiating factor of the Grow Great Girls programs. Secondly, in searching through messaging included on the program websites, only one program seemed to be grounded in research similar to the Cultivate Conscious Kids programs. Finally, each program operates on a variation of the definition of leadership.
Conclusions & Reflections

What first began with passion and a few requests to address the mother-daughter connection quickly grew to become the response to an escalating societal need. There is no question the Cultivate Conscious Kids organization has identified an unmet need and created a way to fulfill it. By staying true to the foundations of it’s programming (See Appendix D), the organization will continue to empower youth to navigate the complexities of our world.

It has been an honor and gift to have such an integral role in the foundation of this organization. This work fills me with inspiration and a certain hope that tomorrow’s world leaders will be just that much more aware, empathetic, compassionate, loving, and peaceful than those of today.

Grow Great Girls: A Mother-Daughter Leadership Experience
August 19, 2016

8:30-9:00am Check-In/Registration
- Location(s):
  - Registration Table/Brunch: 5th Floor

9:00-9:30 Welcome and Introduction
As we begin, we present a framework for the house we will explore over the course of our day. The topics we will explore will help us understand how as women and girls, as well as mothers and daughters, we may be conditioned to think about ourselves and our relationships.

- Interventions:
  - Games/activities to teach SOLE concepts
  - Establish why we are here
  - Share your expectations
  - Set the tone for the day

9:30-9:50 Taster Break
Over the course of our time together, we will work in groups that will support your learning. Each group will include four women of varying ages, and they will share their own ideas. In our time, the activities will be designed to begin in sets and then move on to deeper interactions. Each group will be assigned a topic, and they will begin to explore the activity together.

- Interventions:
  - Encourage self-reflection
  - Promote active listening
  - Foster empathy and understanding

9:50-9:55 Quick Break & Move to Next Session

9:55-10:00 How do you represent yourself?
In this session, four women will discuss how they represent themselves. Each group will be assigned a topic, and they will begin to explore the activity together.

- Interventions:
  - Encourage self-reflection
  - Promote active listening
  - Foster empathy and understanding

CULTIVATE CONSCIOUS KIDS

- Intentions:
  - Continue to develop self-confidence and a strong sense of self.
  - Facilitate positive communication between mothers and daughters.
  - Provide space and activity for mothers and daughters that allows them to explore what they love about each other in order to create appreciation and value within the relationship.

- Activity (Small groups with mothers/daughters together):
  - PBLADES: Think about the six pairs. What makes it special? Why is it special?
    - What do you love about the six pairs? What makes this special? Why is it special?
    - What is different about these pairs? What do you love about them?
    - What do you think is special about these pairs? Why is it special?
  - Stay in small groups to reflect on the previous questions. (Each pair to one another and think about how this experience is)
  - Ask for volunteers to share with the group.

- Proposed:
  - STAY IN SMALL GROUPS TO REFLECT ON THE PREVIOUS QUESTIONS. (Each pair to one another and think about how this experience is)
  - Ask for volunteers to share with the group.

- Needs:
  - Paper and markers.

- Prompts for Facilitators:
  - Group for Mothers:
    - "I want to share some things with you."
    - What is special about the relationship you have with your daughter?
  - Group for Daughters:
    - "I want to share something with you."
    - What do you love about the relationship you have with your mother?

- Activity (Separate small groups):
  - Activity: How do you feel about each other?
  - Questions:
    - What do you love about each other?
    - How do you feel about each other?
    - How are you related to each other?

- Location(s):
  - Breakout session room (mother-daughter pairs)

- Notes:
  - What do you love about each other?
  - How do you feel about each other?
  - How are you related to each other?

Step 1:
- Objective:
  - "I want to share some things with you."

CULTIVATE CONSCIOUS KIDS

Lunch

- Intensions:
  - Participants will have “Lunch Time Jokers” in their folders and have the option of looking through or just relaxing during lunch.

- Location(s): Coming near L27 in the shade, tables outside around Bar 5 with additional tables from Catering.

10:15-10:30 Lines That Divide

This session will shed light on the unique experiences that may be common to each of us in our daily lives and relationships as reflection on today’s society.

- Intensions:
  - Highlight the places we have similar experiences. (“You too!” “Me too!”)
  - Build connection for each other and our experiences.
  - Develop empathy for what others have gone through.
  - Have gratitude for pastures apart of our lives.
  - Create awareness for the feelings that exist around our experiences.
  - Engage critical thinking about gender roles and dynamics.

- Activity (All together in one large group):
  - Participants will have “Lines That Divide” in their folders and have the option of looking through it or just relaxing during lunch.

- Questions:
  - Do your best to be truthful. Remember, we want to be honest with ourselves and others.
  - How do you feel about these questions?

- Location(s): Either Cooly Lawn or MSH West Palm.

- Questions:
  - Have you been documented solely because you are a woman?
  - Have you been judged solely because you are a woman?
  - Have you been treated solely because you are a woman?

2:15-3:45 Small Group Discussion (with guides)

In this session, mothers and daughters will discuss what they observed and felt during the Theater of the Empowered. Participants will have the opportunity to talk about situations in their own lives that are difficult and confusing, and get support from facilitators and other group members.

- Intensions:
  - Provide a safe space for the participants to share and explore challenges and questions.
  - Offer them skills, strategies, and perspectives for dealing with challenging issues.

- Activity (Separate small group):
  - Location(s): Breakout rooms.
  - Needs: Sticks to be in breakout rooms where participants arrive.
CULTIVATE CONSCIOUS KIDS

Notes:
- Begin with power stance activity - Amy Cuddy
- Open up the fox dialogue
- How did you feel during lines that divide/threaten the empowered
  - Journal
  - Small groups
  - Large group
- Topic suggestions on the board/wall (home, school, friends)
- Write down questions/topics and put them in a box
  - Questions about school, friends, home, relationship with mom
  - Feelings about threat of the empowered
- Write down what is leadership to you
  - Where can you be a leader in your life
  - How does everything we did today connect to leadership?
    - How can you become a leader yourself
      - What does leadership look like at home, in my family, in school, with yourself based on the day?
    - Using butcher paper on the wall for everyone to add while walking around
- End the session with letter/prompt writing (2nd)
  - Mothers: write letter to be mailed to daughter
  - Daughters: prompts in folders

Prompts for Facilitators:
- Introduce replacing judgment with curiosity
- Help them see the power in naming feelings and experiences
- Introduce the idea that if we own our story, we can “write the ending”
- It feels like this session is about awareness

3:45-4:15 Words & Selfies
During this time, participants will be encouraged to identify a word or phrase that represents her biggest takeaway of the day.
- Intentions:
  - Bring together the day and create a takeaway for each pair
- Activity (Begin together then broken up into sections to speed up the photo taking):
  - Explanation of activity can be done in a large group then broken up to write words and take photos (for naming purposes).
    - Location(s): West Patios. Then spread out to use the building walls as backdrops for the photos.

4:15 - 4:20 Closing Remarks
Closings are important! We will gather together for a final reflection on the collective wisdom that you contributed to during the day.

Welcome to dreams and goals
We will be taking you on a journey to create a set of dreams and goals that are unique to you. We'll explore your passions and you'll leave knowing that you have full choice in all your decisions.

We're so excited to take you through ivivva's dreams & goals program as this is the first step in achieving what you want.

Let's get started:
A goal is:

What is a goal you have achieved that you're proud of?

What is a goal you're working on right now?

Goals
There are six steps to setting your dreams & goals.

1. Possibility & Passion
2. Dreams
3. Excitement
4. Balance
5. Forms
6. Practice
2 Dreams
Time to start dreaming, write your dream in the cloud below.
Your age in 10 years is _____

1 Possibility & Passion
This is the place to draw, write and think about friends, family, passions. Use the words you chose from the happiness word list.
What do you love and want in your life? Write or draw everything you love in the heart provided below.
CULTIVATE CONSCIOUS KIDS

3 Excitement

Let’s do a quick butterfly check-in:
- Does your dream give you butterflies? Yes? No?
- Does it make you excited? Yes? No?

4 Balance

There are different things in your life that all add up to make your life joyful and full, these things are usually divided into three areas:
- life
- health
- school

Look at your dream and put a square around anything that has to do with health, circle anything that is school related, and underline anything that is about life. Notice how your dream includes all different areas that are important to you.

5 Format

Now it is time to create your goals:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>10 years from now</th>
<th>5 years from now</th>
<th>This year</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

Health

School

Life

Things to remember when writing your goals:
- present tense = affirmative = by when
- Present tense = Cut out words like will, want to, and try. Sansing if it’s happening now.
- Affirmative = Speak of things you want instead of things you don’t want.
- By when = Pick a month, day, and a year, this can change and it is important to add.
- Trickle Rock = Start at 10 years and work backwards.
6 Practice

Step 1

Think of three people you are excited to share your goals with. These are the people that will support you in taking the first steps toward your dreams and goals. Write their names below and a time in the next week you’ll share with them.

The three people I’ll share my goals with are...

__________________________

__________________________

__________________________

Step 2

Come up with ways that you like to share your goals. Remember it’s about the steps you take to achieve them that will get you closer to the end goal.

Cultivate Conscious Kids: December 2, 2016

20 min OPENING ACTIVITY: DREAM SHARING

Intention:
- Authoritative in their own self-image to others and their dreams
- Respect for self and others, and systems that impact their leadership
- Set example for partnership between facilitators and participants in leadership development

Activity:
- Close facilitator describes the deliverable for this activity
- Participants describe reasons for dreaming their own dreams
- Participants share their dreams
- Upon completion, the first facilitator says, "Thank you for sharing"
- Participants invite participants to write their dreams on the flip chart, emphasizing that each dream is unique and specific to the individual
- Participants invite participants to share their dreams
- Go clockwise or counterclockwise
- One participant shares their dream.
- Upon completion, the next person to share says, "Thank you for sharing"
- Optional: Group song begins here
- Next person shares dream response
- Repeat participant process until everyone in the small group has shared.
- Facilitator closes with "Thank you all for sharing" and encouraging participants to use this information as a reference for the rest of the day's activities. Transition to: "Your next activity further explores who you are in your dream."

Notes for Facilitator:
- This activity sets an enthusiastic tone for positivity and partnership for the rest of the day. Be mindful of how these dreams unfold, specifically, how they describe self, others, and systems will access to these dream responses as reflection at the end of the day, to see how they can incorporate what they have learned to make these dreams happen.
- Be prepared to model this activity with a personal dream of yours. (Remember to consider: What is real? What are they doing/saying? What is true?)
- Connects participants to the process.
- If stuck with next time, ask the students how the activity went for them. What surprised you?

35 min Quick Break & Move to Next Session

3:50-3:55 10 min Introduction: ALL TOGETHER

Intention:
- Set the framework for the unique way Imaginative views of leadership
- Establish why we are here
- Encourage participants to share their own ideas and stories

Activity:
- Ask participants to introduce themselves and why they are here
- Elicit stories and experiences related to leadership
- Set the tone for the week
- Transition to the next activity: Dream Sharing

Cultivate Conscious Kids: December 2, 2016
CULTIVATE CONSCIOUS KIDS

Intention:
- Begin to explore the concept of voice: what it means, looks like, feels like.
- Learn techniques to communicate clearly, ask for what you need, and resolve conflict.
- Identify places they feel there is space for their voice and where there isn’t.
- Plan the front or endings to create more space to emphasize and connect.

Activity:
- Begin by role-playing a situation between facilitators based on the example opposite of Curalate to grab students’ attention. You state:
  - What do they notice? What must be improved?
  - One facilitator explains the lesson of that exercise - start by opening up noting that in the questions, many of them wanted to learn how to stand up to peer pressure, handle conflicts with parents and friends.
    - What the cost of that? (What is it to you? What is it to you, others?)
  - Transition: One of the most important lessons people can learn is to stand up for what they believe is right and to bring those to what matters to them, versus what matters to society.
  - Think of a place in your life where you would like to have more of a voice.
- One facilitator explains Power of the “I” statement:
  - “I” statements convey ownership of the experience; “I” statements convey ownership of the experience.
  - “I” statements permit responsibility for what you say and what you do.
  - “I” statements are great for turning a blame game.
  - Ask: What might be some important lessons you could learn from an “I” statement? Ask for examples of using an “I” statement if you were someone feeling bullied by another student.
- One facilitator explains Curalate template:
  - Get grounded: be sure you’re calm and going into it with the intention of connecting, not just talking.
  - Ask permission: I’d like to talk to you, is now a good time?
  - I feel... (feeling word: hurt, isolated, angry, happy, loved, etc.) “Name it to tame it.”
  - When you... (observable behavior: don’t respond to my tests)
    - Listen: message (what are the boring you say it?) and then ask: is there anything else?
  - What I want to see... (state what you’d like to see, I want for you to tell me if you’re busy or talk to me if there’s something else)
    - Listen: message and then ask: is there anything else?
  - What you can count on me for... (this is about accountability and recognizing that each person has their part)
    - Then the other person has the opportunity to respond to what the speaker brought up and decide whether or not they can agree to give the speaker what he/she asked for.
  - Two facilitators model - male facilitator is the speaker.
    - Ask the student what they noticed speaker doing well. What could the speaker have improved on?
    - What did the listener do well?

- Identity what holds you back:
  - Continue setting the tone for the vulnerability and depth required for work done throughout the week.

Activity:
- Facilitator describes the front of the mask. (What will you show the world each day?)
- Facilitator model response: sharing the front of their own mask.
  - Upon completion of sharing, the other facilitator says, “Thank you for sharing”.
- Facilitator invites participants to create the front side of their own mask.
  - Use words, drawings, colors, and any other way they choose to depict the two sides of themselves.
  - Consider how they show the world plays into their own leadership practices.
  - Facilitator invites participants to share their masks with a partner/group of 2-3.
  - Remind participants to thank their peers for sharing once they have finished sharing.
- Facilitator describes the back of the mask. (What do you not show the world or keeping to yourself?)
- Facilitator model response: sharing the back of their own mask.
  - Upon completion of sharing, the other facilitator says, “Thank you for sharing”.
- Facilitator invites participants to create the back side of their own mask.
  - Use words, drawings, colors, and any other way they choose to depict the two sides of themselves.
  - Consider how their hidden self plays into their own leadership practices.
  - The backside of the mask can include both strengths and challenges for improvement.
  - Facilitator invites participants to share their masks with a partner/group of 2-3.
  - Remind participants to thank their peers for sharing once they have finished sharing.
  - Bring the group back together to discuss what you valued and encouraging participants to keep sides of their mask in mind for the rest of the day’s activities.
  - Transition: “What are you next activity will explore how you express yourself.”

Prompts for Facilitators:
- Who do you want to show the world?
  - What are some strengths that you bring to your role as a leader?
  - What are some strengths that are hidden behind the mask?
- Be mindful of the “shoulds.” What can others see side of the mask because they believe it should “shock them?”
  - How does each side of the mask show up in your day?
  - How would it look if you lived by the inside mask or even both sides of the mask?
  - Reflection back to a dream activity.
  - What is on your mask (front side) that is holding you back from your dreams?
  - Reflection back to leadership.
  - If you could share people the backside of your mask, who would you be and how could it lead?
CULTIVATE CONSCIOUS KIDS

Circle of Connection

This section will shed light on the unique experiences that may be common to each of us in our daily lives and relationships to peers in today's society.

- Intentions:
  - Build empathy for each other and our experiences.
  - Develop trust and bond with each other.
  - Share and learn from each other's experiences.
  - Create awareness of the feelings that exist around our experiences.

- Rules:
  - Respect and suspend judgment (towards yourself and others).

- Activity:
  - Once the group is seated in a circle, have each member share something they find interesting about themselves or their experiences.

Prompts for Facilitators:
- What did you notice about your circle?
- What did you notice about the way these ideas were shared?
- How did you feel about the way these ideas were shared?

Small Group Discussion

This is an opportunity to reflect upon the Circle of Connection activity and allow students to explore their experiences in this circle. We invite everyone to begin to think about leadership, what it is and how to do it.

- Prompts for Facilitators:
  - How did you feel about sharing the stories?
  - What did you notice about the circle?

Leadership Call to Action and Commitment Card

- Intentions:
  - Leadership is a call to action.
  - Using what was learned and experienced earlier in the day (dreams, stories), bring the newborn into action.

Prompts for Facilitators:
- Connection back to faith activity.
- What do you notice about the way these ideas were shared?
- What are you thinking as you listen to others share their stories?
CULTIVATE CONSCIOUS KIDS

Activity:
- Individual discussions in small groups (10 min)
  - After the short break and in the same small groups, discuss leadership as a call to action.
  - Each student shares ideas about being committed to self, school, others, community, family, etc. Provide each student with a card and markers.
  - Using what was learned and experienced earlier in the day (dreams, goals, self-behavior, stress, values, social media, circle of connection), have them write about future actions and intentions.
  - Emphasize connecting learning to leadership in action. Possibly review the connection from previous sessions and the future call to action.
  - What are they committing to? They have the option to pick what speaks to each of them. Is school, others, community, family, etc.

Card construction and small group pictures (10 min)
- Card: Write the commitment (call to action) on one side and the intention to live out this commitment on the other side (via their own leadership capacity).
  - Front example:
    - If I were to describe the ideal youth leadership development: be a better person.
    - Follow your dreams.
    - Sow not the bounties of my mind. Be my own self, respect others, respect others' building by a better person.
  - Back example: describes behavior to reach / achieve the front side of the card facilitating small group programs, read 3-5 books, articles, etc. on youth development connect with my peers to find others who share that interest, use what I learn today.
- Small group photos with students holding their cards (call to action facing forward).

Collective hanging of commitments and large group picture (15 min)
- As a small group, students move to the board to place their commitments on the board.
- Someone organizes the small groups as they complete their commitments and from small groups to facilitate the large group photo.
- Consider having students add or staff present to help verbalize thanks for showing leadership in a call to action, and they are present for the final photo.

Prompts for Facilitator:
- This activity is meant to connect the previous activities in a meaningful way and demonstrate leadership is not left at the door, but continues forward.
- Invite students to talk about what they learned with family and show their list of commitments to share this list with the school.
- This activity is about giving space for their voices and commitments.
- How do you think your leadership will unfold in you, in school, at home?
- How are you connected with someone else's leadership?

(LJP-209) Closing Remarks
(Share your new commitment board or share the Circle of Commitment task plan)

Activity Part II (5 minutes)
Everyone thinks of a mode of transportation that best describes them. You go around the room asking people to:
- Say their name
- Say their mode of transportation
- Say whether they like what they said
(might be helpful for a facilitator to model it)
- Notes for Facilitator:
  - This activity sets no expectations for the activity and partnership for the rest of the day. The intention is for it to be fun and light. Get them to think about themselves in a creative way and with their classmates.
  - Be prepared to model this activity with your own metaphor
  - If left with extra time, ask the students what they noticed about the metaphors. Any themes?

Activity Part III (5 minutes)
Facilitators split the group into boys and girls in different parts of the room and fill out the Leadership Chart.
What Looks LIKE, When we Do, What we Say, What we THINK.
What do they see in a few seconds of people they think are leaders.
- Notes for Facilitator:
  - Moving the kids start thinking about leadership and their understanding of it.
  - Notice what comes up. Ask them telling a more traditional concept of leadership.
  - Can you prompt them to think creatively about leadership and leaders?

- Notes for Debrief:
  - What was the concept they chose share?
  - Is there a difference between the boys and the girls' charts?
  - Do they see themselves as having/being those qualities and actions?
  - Add to the chart if something new comes up in the discussion.

(IDLE LEADER)

INTRODUCTION:
- To create a graphic image representation of leadership and an ideal leader.
- To explore several models of what a leader is and begin to understand how the media (television, movies), social media, family experiences, and self-identity influence how we think about leaders and if we believe we can become one.
- Identify how our gender (if we are more masculine/feminine) and sex (boy/girl) influence how we think about ourselves as being a leader.

ACTIVITY & LEADERS CONSIDERATIONS:
- Facilitator can explain this to all students at once, or they hear in small groups.
- Split groups from their current group into two smaller groups (4-6 boys/girls). Each group takes a name of the room to create their poster, working together.
- Trains people in the room, and teachers and facilitators with around two ask questions:

Outcomes:
- Help students gain a better understanding of themselves, begin a process of self-discovery.
- Introduce students to the idea of leadership; support the idea of seeing themselves.
- Develop self-esteem and self-confidence.
- Build strong and confident in order to use their voice and advocate for what they stand for and believe.
- Help students realize that responsibility is going along with the power.
- Help students recognize the aspect of their actions and the power to make a positive difference.
- Develop student strategies in managing peer relations, build bridges and navigate the outcomes, RBC.
- Acknowledge and address student/ peer (form of change) not being in control, the stress between child and adult, seeking happiness and not finding it.
- Start to build a collective leadership identity: developing both the understanding and the practice of leadership.
- Support and attend with the school/department leadership principles and development goals.

Implications:
- Time to debrief, make sense of the activities.
- Speak to them, talk, encourage all voices.
- Take a break... what can we do differently.
- Encourage new ways of thinking, being, feeling. Gave them permission to do it differently than the social norm.
- Engage multiple ways of learning- music, movement.

INTRODUCTION: IN THE CLASSROOMS, ONE MALE, ONE FEMALE FACILITATOR

- Intention:
  - Set the framework for the way we think of leadership as something you do and have.
  - Establish why we are here today.
  - Encourage participants to share information to fully participate with honesty, openness, and truth.
  - Set up ground rules for the day.

OPENING ACTIVITY: What type of transportation are you? The Leadership Chart.

THE SELF BEHIND THE MASK (Split boys/ girls)
(Takes place in classroom)

- Intention(s):
  - Continue self reflection to bring to awareness how we "show up" and we move through the world.
  - Begin to think about all parts of ourselves including the light and shadow.
  - Identify what makes us sad, unique, etc.
  - Identify what holds us back.

- Logistics Considerations:
  - Students in same classroom with one male and one female facilitator.
  - Facilitator can decide if they want to keep the sharing separate in pairs/boys and girls.

- Supplies:
  - White paper and markers
  - Construction paper or cardboard
  - String or elastic bands

- Role:
  - Respect self in this activity.

- Deliverables:
  - Participants will create a mask. The front of the mask will have a depiction of the self they bring to the world and the back will depict who they really are including the pieces of themselves they choose to hold back.

- Activity:
  - Facilitator describes the front of the mask.
    - What you see is the world each day.
  - Facilitator provides a model example of a mask and includes the front side of the mask.
  - Upon completion of sharing, the other facilitator says, "Thank you for sharing.
  - Facilitator invites participants to create the front side of their own mask.

- Observations:
  - Students begin thinking about their choices.

- Supplies:
  - Paper, paper and magazines, newspapers, markers, scissors, glue

- Deliverables:
  - A group: One from each group
  - Discussion: Discussion about the posters, what was their understanding of leadership?
  - Two posters: What do they notice about the posters?
  - Two more posters: What does it mean to be in a leadership role?

(10:30-11:30)

MIND BREAK: (Students come back to same classroom)

(10:30-11:30)

Animal Theater & The Power of Choice

- Intentions:
  - Begin to recognize we have patterns and habits for how we respond and react to situations.
  - Learn about some typical ways people react and respond and the pros and cons of each (i.e., the wise Owl, the methodical Tortoise, the flexible and agile Alligator).
  - Realize the power of choice in how we respond to things that happen to us in our lives.
  - Learn some techniques to gain ground and express (like deep breathing) in order to respond in a better way possible.
  - Realize that our small actions on our part can make a big difference in a situation.

- Activity Part I: Animal Masks and Our Power to Choose a Response

  - Introduction: In tough situations, especially if there's conflict or something happens that's not fair (right), we all react differently. Usually, our reactions are habituated. Sometimes we want to change, but don't know how. What can we do to make things better?

  - Discussion: "Here's the mask - what do you think?"
    - Cut a picture from a magazine and paste the character's face and imagine what type of character this type is. What is it? Are they a ready to be transformed?
    - What does it mean to be "transformed" or "versatile?"
    - Let the students role-play the different animal-type responding. What type of outcomes stem from the different animal types?
    - Choose three scenes and ask the students to choose the animal that best fits each scene. Then have them write a short story of what they think would happen.

- Activity Part II: Theater of the Empowered

  - Ask the students to create a scene or freeze frame that shows a conflict, body language, emotion, etc.
  - Set them up in the room and ask students to "Freeze Frame" their scenes and do something different. All actors in the same room on setting out the scene with the new actor, improvise

- Deliverables:
  - A group: One from each group
  - Discussion: Discussion about the posters, what was their understanding of leadership?
  - Two posters: What do they notice about the posters?
  - Two more posters: What does it mean to be in a leadership role?

- Activity Part III: Theater of the Empowered

  - Ask the students to create a scene or freeze frame that shows a conflict, body language, emotion, etc.
  - Set them up in the room and ask students to "Freeze Frame" their scenes and do something different. All actors in the same room on setting out the scene with the new actor, improvise.
Circle of Connection & Human Knot

This session will shed light on the unique experiences that may be common to each of us in our daily lives and relationships as peers in today's society.

Circle of Connection
- Intentions:
  - Understanding the human knot will be a fun way to get moving, see how we can work together, see which "knots" we go to when we are solving problems.
  - Groups may select to do human as same-sex or mixed-sex groups. Ideal is 6-8 people per group.
  - Start with the circle of connection.
  - Then move to human knot.

Rules:
- Respect and suspended judgement (of yourself and others).

Activity:
- Once the group is seated in a giant circle, the facilitator can let the group know that some questions might not feel pertinent or like they apply to them, and that's okay. Some are gaining more trust, but some remain toward goals. Just take notice of those around you, and be aware of how you see the questions as asked and people, including yourself, move across the lines.
- Do your best to be truthful. Remember, we want to be honest with ourselves and honest with each other. NO ONE of us are perfect, and no one here expects you to be.
- Maybe we say something about fear and how we are afraid to share the places where we feel vulnerable, but bring up, especially about the places we feel uncertain, is one of the biggest displays of courage. This can vary much value to the mask exercise - what does it mean to bring or show the backside of your mask?

Human Knot
- Intentions:
  - Fun, team-building activity. Kids have to work together.
  - They get to see how they act and things as a challenging situation.
  - They get a chance to practice leadership and display the qualities on the chart.
  - Practice communication and achieving a task.

Directions:
- Each person should be creating their own circle. The facilitator will ask everyone to link hands and make sense to take the hand of someone standing across the circle.
- Next, have everyone lift their right and left hands to make the hands of another person standing on the circle.
- Make sure that no one is holding hands with someone standing directly beside you.
- OBJECTIVE: The group should come together and figure out how to streamline the knot (building a circle of people) without encountering, go of any hands.
- Options: Improve a tune limit. Make it a competition between groups.
  - If they finish with time left you can run groups and do it again.
  - Be sure to have time to process, debrief, and discuss.

Encourage participants to use words, drawings, colors, and any other way they choose to depict the parts of themselves on this side of the mask.
- Encourage participants to remember how they showed their masks into their own leadership practices.
- Facilitator invites participants to share their masks with a partner or group of those (depending on the size of the group).
- Actively listen for each participant to share.
- Encourage participants to think their peers for sharing once they have finished sharing.
- Facilitator describes the back of the mask.
  - What do you not show the world OR keeping to yourself?
- Facilitator and responses sharing the back of their own mask.
  - One facilitator shares their mask explaining the backside of their mask.
- Open completion of sharing, the facilitator says, "Thank you for sharing.
- Facilitator invites participants to create the backside of their own mask.
- Encourage participants to use words, drawings, colors, and any other way they choose to depict the parts of themselves on this side of the mask.
- Encourage participants to consider how they're self-designed into their own leadership practices.
- Remind students that the backside of the mask can include both strengths and areas for improvement.
- Facilitator invites participants to share their masks with a partner or group of those (depending on the size of the group).
- Actively listen for each participant to share.
- Encourage participants to think their peers for sharing once they have finished sharing.
- Bring the group back together as one to debrief together.
- See facilitator prompts.
- Facilitator closes activity with “Thank you for sharing!” and encouraging participants to keep those sides of their masks in mind for the rest of the day’s activities. Transition with “After the mask to your next activity will explore how you express your values.”

Prompts for Facilitators:
- Who do you want to show the world?
- What are your greatest strengths that you bring to your life - interactions with friends, family, to your school work, to your team or a group your are involved in?
- What are some things you are afraid to share?
- What are your strengths that are hidden behind the mask?
- Be mindful of the “should” - What is or is not said side of the mask because you believe it “should” there?
- How does each side of the mask show up in your day?
- How would it look if you lived by the inside mask or even both sides of the mask?

Connection back to Animal Brain

Connection back to leadership

If you could show people the backside of your mask, who would you be and how could you lead...
5th grade letter / 5 minute movement

Session has several intentions:
1 is a chance to reflect upon the Circle of Connection activity and allow students to explore their experience of the day. We invite everyone to begin to think about leadership, what it is and how to do it.
2 is to revisit the leadership poster and have them fill out their own with their individual qualities.
3 of this Session
Discuss and make sense of the day
Fill out a personal version of the Leadership Chart and on the back, answer prompted questions that will be a "letter" sent home to their parents to share what they did.
Write a letter to a future 5th grader, giving him/her some leadership lessons and guidance.
Do a bit of movement, breathing, standing/walking strong, etc.

To facilitators:
How did you feel about answering the questions?
What did you notice in the Circle of Connection activity?
What was that like seeing the places you were similar with your teachers? Your peers?
How did it feel when you were in a different place than your friends and classmates?
What did you learn about yourself in this activity?
What do you think the leadership lesson is in this activity?
Keeping in mind everything we have done today, what does leadership look like to you? (Transitions into activity - Leadership Call to Action & Commitment Cards)

Whole-Group closing
Get together on the grass and form a circle.
1 object (or two) and have it go around the circle, putting a commitment or promise into the rock on behalf of ourselves as leaders.

Grow Great Girls: August 19, 2016

The Center for Women’s Leadership at the University of San Diego presents:

GROW GREAT GIRLS
A Mother-Daughter Leadership Experience

Join us for a workshop uniquely designed to build girls’ personal confidence, self-esteem, and social capacity

• Discover what you value and stand for
• Develop the courage to speak up for what you believe
• Learn to navigate challenging friendships and relationships
• Learn how to create boundaries to keep yourself emotionally and physically safe
• Strengthen the bond between moms and daughters in the critical middle school and teenage years
• Develop the ability to make tough decisions and have difficult conversations
• Explore the impact of social media

“The most common way people give up their power is by thinking they don’t have any.”
~Alice Walker

COURAGE  CONNECTION  CONFIDENCE

Held on the beautiful campus of the University of San Diego. To register click here for the REGISTRATION page:
www.sandiego.edu/growgreatgirls

• Friday, August 19, 2016
• 9 am - 4:30 pm
• $79 (early bird) mom/daughter pair
• For girls ages 9-14 and their moms
• Led by experts in girls and women’s leadership
• USD leadership students as mentors and facilitators
"I admire [the] program and see in its significance for girls and mothers. I am impressed by the potentials of cultivating mother-daughter relationships in meaningful ways. These powerful bonds provide energy and direction for both women and girls and the leadership skills they develop will radiate out into the communities they touch. It is a definite need in our society: today, tomorrow and always."

- Elizabeth Converse, supporter of the Grow Great Girls Programs

Post Experience Survey

1. Did your connection with your daughter/mother improve as a result of participating in the Grow Great Girls event?
   - Yes: 100%

The Mom's had a lot to talk about involving social media. I heard from my daughter that some girls are experiencing things like kissing pages on Instagram where you post these experiences and she was surprised to learn how young some of that begins. But hasn't experienced that in her circle.

Would love to see more about the impact of social media and how we, as parents, can help our children make good decisions regarding social media.

What worked well throughout the day? (4 responses)

Mother daughter time

good idea to separate girls by age

Your team was so on the time clock, very impressive.

I thought it was well-organized and the group leaders were well-equipped to handle the groups.

What did not work quite as well throughout the day? (2 responses)

Triads didn't seem to work with the agenda. Great breakfast and lunch, but breaks would have been nice even if it meant less at those. More mixing and reason to mix would have been nice.

The improv...not much participation.

If you could change one thing about the event, what would it be? (3 responses)

Half day

You need more material keyed to age of girls and mother-daughter. It felt like you took another workshop and just used it for this.

More of Lorry! She was the best!
What topics would you like to focus on during future Grow Great Girls events?
(5 responses)

- Humility
  - nothing to add see earlier

- More leadership for the girls and how we can help them

- Would love to see more about the impact of social media and how we, as parents, can help our children make good decisions regarding social media.

Do you have any additional feedback for the Grow Great Girls team?

- Strong team you have

- no thank you

- Thank you USD Leadership Department.

- My daughter and I flew to SD from Rhode Island just for this conference and it was totally worth it. I’m so thankful I was able to learn more about women’s leadership and how to help my daughter become a strong, independent young lady.

Set Your Soul on Fire
GIRL POWER GETS AN INJECTION OF OPTIMISM AND A BOOST OF ENERGY

On a sun-dappled Sunday afternoon this past fall, a sizable group of preteen and teenage girls and their moms gathered on the lawn beside Copley Library. Helping themselves to yoga mats, they launched into a series of stretches and poses led by a purposeful and poised high school sophomore, who, at age 15, is already a certified yoga instructor.

Her presence at an event aimed at inspiring girls to gain confidence and become leaders spoke for itself. She's already a leader and wants other girls to know they can be, too. Grow Great Girls — the program that staged the workshop — was born at the School of Leadership and Education Sciences, the brainchild of Lorri Sulpizio, PhD, director of the Leadership Institute and founder and director of the Center for Women's Leadership.

A longtime college and high school basketball coach, Sulpizio was already interested in personal development when her research led her to girls' empowerment. "This piece around girls and women finding their voices and finding the courage to accomplish their goals, that just resonated," she says.
“Especially in a world that still has a lot of gender bias and continues to present a lot of obstacles for girls and women.”

Sulpizio found an eager partner in Ashley Adams BA '10 — now a leadership studies master's student — who was looking for an internship project. A bubbly and energetic force of optimism, Adams grew up among brothers, and says she only realized in hindsight that she had suppressed her spirit because she was a girl.

"On some level, I felt I couldn't be as loud, as boisterous as my brothers were," Adams says. "I wondered what I could have done in the past 25 years, had I not been so bogged down by my own fears and anxiety."

Together, she and Sulpizio developed a strategy and assembled a team of other students and outside consultants. Their first event — a daylong leadership experience in August — attracted an overflow crowd of mothers and daughters, despite having no marketing budget and no official publicity campaign. Its success convinced them they were onto something important.

“I think the way we teach our girls, and the way society molds them, does not foster the confidence to lead them to do whatever they want to do,” Adams says. “Leadership is something that comes from the inside. We want girls to learn how to empower themselves.”

The mother-daughter relationship was a good place to start, Adams says, because mothers act as natural role models and can be consistent sources of support. But only if the lines of communication are clear and free of conflict. That can be especially challenging as girls approach the teenage years.

Brooke Henderson, 14, was skeptical when her mother, Frances, urged her to attend the August conference with her. But by the end of the day, she was convinced. "It was good, really good," she says with a wide smile. "I think it made me more open to talking to my mom about stuff. Before I was scared she wasn't going to listen. Now I feel like she definitely understands more."
Frances became emotional as she recalled one of the exercises, where the girls and their mothers each made a list of things they liked about the other. She was surprised to learn that Brooke admired qualities about her that she didn’t think she’d recognized. And she was further surprised that both their lists included many of the same words. “For example, she said I was kind,” Frances remembers. “I think she’s kind, but I didn’t know she saw me that way. I think she’s funny. She thought I was funny.”

Brooke also opened up about the social challenges she faces in ninth grade, where girls struggle to fit in among their female and male peers and are often made to feel like they’re not good enough. “If we’re not good enough to make a team, or we’re not pretty enough to have a boyfriend, or stuff like that. That’s the big thing right now,” she says, adding that the conference helped her share feelings with Frances she hadn’t felt like she could share before. “I think she might have learned that I’m not so comfortable with my body because I don’t like to talk about it,” she said. “She’s definitely more in tune with what I’m thinking.”

Now, when she’s having a bad day, Brooke says her mother is more likely to be forgiving and give her some space. And Brooke has learned techniques including affirmations that remind her she is good enough. That’s critical in a society where — as the past fall’s bruising election campaign made clear — girls and women are still constantly given the message that they are not.

The facts illuminate what some researchers call a stalled revolution. Women comprise more than one-half of the U.S. population, earning nearly 60 percent of all undergraduate and master’s degrees. They earn nearly one-half of all medical degrees and law degrees.

But while women account for nearly one-half the country’s labor force, their presence in leadership roles is scant. A mere five percent of CEOs at S&P 500 companies are women. The boards of those companies are only 20 percent female. At the nation’s law firms, only one in five women is a partner. In higher education, women hold only about one-third of full professorships, and only one in four college presidents is a woman. In legislatures across the country, women continue to be vastly outnumbered.

The wage gap persists as well. In a recent report, the World Economic Forum found that instead of narrowing, economic divergence actually widened over the past several decades. According to their recent Global Gender Gap report, women can now expect to wait another 170 years before they attain wage parity with men.
“If girls get a message that they aren’t good leaders or aren’t valued for their leadership, they are more likely to opt out,” says Lori Watson, PhD, chair of USD’s philosophy department and former director of the gender studies program. “Especially in the preteen group, where girls who assert themselves can be seen as bitchy or bossy. In that vulnerable age of wanting peer acceptance, girls may shy away from leadership to avoid gender stereotypes that don’t attach to boys in the same way.”

Grow Great Girls aims to address that societal message with an approach that gives girls the room to express themselves in a safe and accepting environment, while considering the idea of leadership in a unique way. “We don’t see leadership as something that you are,” Sulipiozio says. “We see it as something that you do. Anybody can do it. We take away the role piece, so you can be a leader without being a manager or a CEO.”

At the October workshop, yoga was followed by a session about goals and aspirations. As the participants shared their ideas, a slideshow at the front of the room featured a series of inspirational quotes. “Be fearless in pursuit of what sets your soul on fire” and “be who you are, not what the world wants you to be,” were among them.

In one group, Holly Evans and her daughter Emily, 13, shared goals and some giggles. “I’m going through a kind of career transition and I thought it would be neat to involve her as I start a new trajectory,” Holly says. The two had come from Riverside to attend the event, and both said they were happy they did.

“I figured out some goals for the future, like traveling the world and having horses,” Emily added. “And she showed me her goals. I feel closer to her. We can help each other achieve our goals and we can be more of a team.”
The program has shown so much promise that Sulpizio and Adams and their band of volunteers are taking it on the road, conducting workshops in schools involving girls and boys.

"I think this is a program that could really launch the name of the Leadership Institute and the Center for Women's Leadership as well," Adams predicts. "We had to cut off registration at our first event. That showed me there really is a need for this."

The need may well be greater now, after an election in which the country's first female major-party candidate lost to a man whose campaign was dogged by charges of sexism and xenophobia.

"The effects of the election on young girls and their future empowerment depends on how the current messages that demean women are mediated," says Michelle Camacho, professor of sociology and special assistant to the provost. "The history of civil rights for women and marginalized groups is characterized by active resistance to social injustice. My hope is that we galvanize in young women our potential to mobilize against biases, racism and sexism."

Against that backdrop, and with Grow Great Girls already well on its way, Lorri Sulpizio has made funding a priority. She's confident she'll find supporters who'll want to help build a model that can be used nationwide. Her goals may sound lofty, but her message to young girls is beautifully simple.

"Get to know your story," she urges. "Understand it. Then you can write your own ending." — Karen Gross
