THE COURT: Good afternoon.

Would you call the calendar, please?

THE CLERK: Yes, Your Honor. C83-122V,
Gordon Hirabayashi vs. The United States of America.

THE COURT: Would you kindly make your appearances by just stating your name and the party you represent?

MR. STONE: Victor Stone for the United States.

THE COURT: Your name again?

MR. STONE: Victor Stone for the United States.

MS. BARNES: Susan Barnes for the United States Attorney's office.

MS. BANNAI: Your Honor, I'm Kathryn Bannai, attorney for the Petitioner Gordon K. Hirabayashi.

MR. HALL: Your Honor, I am Camden Hall, attorney for Mr. Hirabayashi as well.

THE COURT: And is the Petitioner present?

THE PETITIONER: Yes. I am Gordon
Hirabayashi, the petitioner.

THE COURT: I see. Very well.

MS. BANNAI: Your Honor, if I may have the permission of the Court, I would like to introduce other counsel for Mr. Hirabayashi present today, as well as 1 counsel for Minoru Yasui and Fred Korematsu.

2 THE COURT: Well, I don't believe they are 3 counsel in this case, so I am going to deny that motion 4 now.

5 Let me say to all of you, in anticipation
6 of this hearing, I have read all of the exhibits
7 introduced on behalf of the Petitioner. I haven't 8 gotten through all the exhibits recently introduced by 9 the Government. I have read all of "Personal Justice 10 Denied," the report of the Commission which was 11 published in December of 1982. I have read, in 12 addition to that, at least two scholarly treatises on 13 this whole situation.

14 So the hearing this afternoon is primarily 15 upon the Government's motion to dismiss, so let me hear 16 from you, Mr. Stone.

17 MR. STONE: Good afternoon, Your Honor.

18 One point that I would make, I think the 19 Court has a copy, and if not, I will be happy to try 20 and get a copy to the Court, an addendum published to 21 the Commission's report.

22 THE COURT: Was that the small volume?

23 MR. STONE: No. In addition to the small 24 volume which contains its recommendations, there was 25 a mimeographed addendum which highlighted some of the

1 factual problems which they decided they need not 2 resolve in reaching their recommendations. I will be 3 happy to supply it to the Court.

4 THE COURT: All right. Let me do this 5 before you start. Those of you who came in first in 6 the back of the room, if you want to come up and sit 7 in these chairs here, there are three, six, nine, 8 eleven chairs, if you would care to come down in the 9 well of the court and sit, any of you, just feel free 10 to come forward.

11 And then there are a few seats, I think 12 reserved for the press inside the little gateway 13 there, if more of you want to come and fill up that 14 bench there, I would be happy to have you do so.

15 Now there are some additional seats on the 16 first bench here, if any of you wanted to take those 17 seats, and there are five or six more chairs here if 18 you want to come forward.

19 I hate to interrupt you, Counsel, but this 20 may be a lengthy hearing, so any of you back there who 21 are now standing, I believe there are sufficient seats 22 for you to be seated, if you would care to be seated.

23 Mr. Barnett, I see you here. I know that 24 you, Arthur Barnett, you've been in this case since 25 '42, I believe. Is that correct?

MR. BARNETT: That's correct, Your Honor.

THE COURT: All right. Now, Mr. Stone.

MR. STONE: Thank you, Your Honor.

I thought I would make just a very brief outline of what you've already read in our pleadings and leave some time, since this hearing was set at Your Honor's request, for you to ask any questions you would like.

THE COURT: Incidentally, I would appreciate either you or someone filing with me this supplemental report which I have not seen.

MR. STONE: Yes, I will, Your Honor.

Essentially the pleading that started this action was a request for coram nobis relief, a post-conviction request in a 40-year-old misdemeanor conviction case which was tried in this court during World War II.

That petition raised allegations that there had been misconduct during the handling of the case, the Government's case. That was the issue it raised in order to have this Court take some action, presumably on coram nobis, setting the case for a new trial. The Government, by furnishing the Court with the original pleadings which were filed in the Supreme Court in this case and some in the Yasui case, some in the Korematsu

1 case, and copies of some published books and records
2 has shown the Court, and in the reply which we just 3 received, the very last reply filed by Mr. Hirabayashi's 4 counsel, they concede that the vast majority of docu-5 ments involved are not in fact newly discovered. They 6 now seem to confine their allegations of newly dis-7 covered misconduct to some Exhibits Q double A and 8 double B, which are exhibits that are internal 9 Government prosecutorial memos that were done by people 10 involved in the prosecution of this case back in 1942.
11 They were attorney work product and they reflected the 12 personal views of the prosecutors. They were not 13 evidentiary documents, and they do not on their face
14 reflect any facts. They simply reflect the judgment 15 of the various federal prosecutors along the way, many 16 of whom I'm freely and happy to admit were hesitant 17 about prosecuting this case, and unhappy generally 18 about prosecuting this case.

19 THE COURT: It wasn't so much unhappiness 20 about prosecuting the case, was it not, but that they 21 were hesitant about not disclosing certain information?
22 At least that's the impression that I got.

23 MR. STONE: The documents themselves show 24 that they were hesitant about prosecuting the case in 25 the way that it had been presented. The way it had

1 been presented by both parties, quite openly in the 2 District Court, was whatever the need to evacuate 3 people, it's unconstitutional as a matter of law, and 4 at later stages in the cases, although that appears to 5 have been conceded by all sides and perhaps even in 6 the Supreme Court, as we point out, the Supreme Court
7 in their opinion in the Hirabayashi case says Mr.
8 Hirabayashi seems to concede that evacuation might be 9 an appropriate response to this kind of threat. None-10 theless, the question is whether it's constitutional.

11 Various attorneys for the Government thought 12 that perhaps that issue should have been litigated, but 13 they didn't include any new information in their docu-14 ments which is not included in all the many other 15 exhibits you have, all of which came to light either 16 during the actual handling of the case, particularly 17 in the Supreme Court where much of General DeWitt's 18 off-color comments were before the Court, or in the 19 handling of the Korematsu case a year later where many 20 of the same allegations were made again, or in 21 published Law Review articles and published books on 22 the subject right through the end of the 1940's.

23 During that period of time, all of these 24 many same factual sources came out. And Mr. Hirabayashi's 25 counsel at page 14 of that last brief do not contend

1 that those are newly discovered.

2 They seem to argue at one point that 3 nonetheless the Government presented an argument that 4 said the case had to be affirmed because time was of 5 the essence and the military leadership here, in what 6 was then a declared war zone, didn't have the time to 7 sift through, making individual determinations.

8 If you look, we have cited you to the page 9 in the Hirabayashi brief and then attached a copy of 10 that brief where the Government did not exclusively 11 make an argument that time was of the essence. They 12 argued in the alternative; that on the one hand, time 13 was short and, on the other hand, the people who had 14 a military job to do at the time didn't feel qualified 15 to make those determinations, irrespective of time.

16 There is an argument that even if the 17 documents were known, the actual authorship of various 18 documents, in particular one published article which 19 was published and freely available to everybody, was 20 only published as the views of an intelligence officer 21 working for the United States.

22 THE COURT: That was the article in Harpers?

23 MR. STONE: Yes, the Harpers magazine
24 article. There were allegations in the Korematsu 25 brief that must have come from the office of Naval

1 Intelligence because it was a matter of public knowl-
2 edge that the Office of Naval Intelligence was in fact 3 the office charged with the intelligence responsibility, 4 along with the FBI, for these matters.

5 So it was quite clear to the Supreme Court
6 and the various dissents in the Korematsu opinion make 7 it quite clear that everybody was aware of how the 8 case was being tried, and several people, including 9 some of the dissenters and some of the petitioners, 10 asked the Supreme Court to send it back so that it 11 might be tried on a real factual record, but the Supreme 12 Court didn't feel that that was appropriate, either 13 because it recognized that many of these issues were 14 then classified and it couldn't expect them, in the 15 context of an ongoing war, to try those issues, or 16 because it felt that it had enough in front of it, 17 which I think it did rule that as a matter of public 18 record its view was that there was no showing that the 19 ruling was completely irrational.

20 Perhaps, as it even alludes in the Supreme 21 Court's own opinions, it was unwise, and the Government
22 did not defend it as a wise decision, and President 23 Ford has backed very far away from it in 1976 when he 24 said it was clearly a national tragedy.

25 THE COURT: I think you've said in your

1 brief that the nation has tried to make amends.

2 Let me ask you this, and then I'm going to 3 have counsel for the petitioner respond, what is it
4 that the Government wants me to do?

5 MR. STONE: The Government's request, and 6 it has been followed explicitly by the District Court
7 in the District of Oregon, and it's been, I think, 8 echoed in substantial part both in the decision in the 9 Korematsu case in San Francisco recently, with which 10 we don't completely agree on jurisdictional grounds, 11 but as we point out in our memo, substantively it 12 essentially follows the request that we made there, 13 and I would call to the Court's attention I just saw 14 today in the newspaper that there is another suit 15 that was also dismissed due to the amount of time that 16 has passed, a civil suit that was filed in the 17 District of Columbia, where again the Government's 18 position is that there is no necessity for what would 19 be a detailed and difficult factual inquiry now into 20 40-year-old events.

21 As Judge Battell stated, it's not necessary
22 to reopen the partially healed wounds of an earlier 23 period in order for the Government to determine that 24 it has no desire to go forward with its prosecution;
25 that even if the Court would order coram nobis relief

1 and give the Government an opportunity to retry the 2 case, the Government would exercise its Rule 48(a)
3 discretion then.

4 Consequently, the Government at this earlier 5 time before we even have the need to convene such a 6 hearing, which we would clearly feel obligated to 7 defend because of the imputations of character which 8 are many. Rather than go through that rather lengthy 9 and I think difficult exercise, where many of the 10 parties and many of the documents are not available, 11 I think it's pretty clear --

12 THE COURT: Many certainly are deceased.

13 MR. STONE: Certainly, and some of the most 14 critical documents, some of the most critical ONI, 15 Office of Naval Intelligence, documents don't seem to 16 be able to be located. The Commission itself has said 17 that.

18 THE COURT: Couldn't Commander Ringle's
19 report be found?

20 MR. STONE: Oh, that is found, but Commander
21 Ringle did not work for ONI headquarters. The head-
22 quarters unit of ONI, as well as the headquarters field 23 offices in Los Angeles and San Francisco in the various 24 Naval districts where the material that -- there is an 25 affidavit from Hiko Yoshenaga Herzig in the civil

1 case in Washington, D.C. that she was never able on 2 behalf of the Commission to catch up with those files
3 for one reason or another.

4 So we do have scattered papers from those 5 people, but we do not have complete files, and it 6 would be pretty clear that that kind of thing would 7 have to be reconstructed.

8 Commander Ringle himself I do not believe 9 worked even in the headquarters unit of the Naval 10 District where he was when those various memos of his 11 were written. He worked in the field office, I
12 believe, the San Pedro field office of the Los Angeles 13 office, so it's not clear exactly what the lines of 14 command were and how the papers arrived at various 15 places other than the fact that they were of course 16 all interesting to the decision makers and the decision 17 makers attempted to inform themselves both through 18 channels and outside channels of as much information 19 as they could before making their decisions.

20 THE COURT: Let me ask you again, then, 21 and I don't mean to be impolite --

22 MR. STONE: Sure.

23 THE COURT: What is it that the Government 24 wants me to do?

25 MR. STONE: The Government, having recognized

1 that this inquiry and the request that we respond has 2 revived our need, in effect, if we were interested in 3 it, to have to gear up a prosecution, believes that 4 once it has been requested to involve itself again in 5 a criminal prosecution, be it on appeal from a case
6 or on certiorari, it once again gives the Government
7 the Rule 48(a) discretion to decide whether it's a 8 case which the Government has any interest in going 9 forward with, and devoting a substantial amount of 10 its and the Court's resources to, the Government has 11 no trouble, as we have not had from the very 12 beginning in this case, in telling you that we don't 13 have any interest in reprosecuting this case or 14 devoting our or the judicial resources to repropse-15 cuting this case and working through a labyrinth of 16 40-year-old history even as a prerequisite to doing 17 that.

18 Consequently, we have moved under Rule 48(a), 19 both in the spirit of the request by the Commission 20 that executive grace in the form of pardons be granted, 21 and in light of the statement made by President Ford 22 in 1976 that this is an incident which is one that 23 this government has attempted to make various amends 24 for, recognizing that irrespective of the merits of 25 the decision to move people, it imposed tremendous

1 hardships.

2 The Government has, consequently, on those 3 bases, recognizing that as Judge Battell said, that 4 there are partially healed wounds of this earlier 5 period, that it might help further heal the wounds for 6 us to move to dismiss, to vacate the misdemeanor
7 conviction and dismiss the underlying indictment.

8 And, frankly, I think that had those mis-
9 demeanors been brought to the attention of President 10 Truman in 1947 when he pardoned thousands of other 11 war-related convictions, including convictions which 12 involved refusals based on that very same treatment of 13 Japanese-Americans in this war zone, that had these 14 been brought to President Truman's attention, it is 15 very likely he would have pardoned these misdemeanor
16 offenses then. I think perhaps they were overlooked 17 precisely because they are misdemeanors and it has 18 rarely been considered necessary to take such action 19 in the case of a misdemeanor.

20 We have gone on in what we filed with the 21 Court to demonstrate that we think there are other 22 serious threshold problems with doing this by way of 23 coram nobis remedy, which Mr. Hirabayashi's counsel 24 asks for.

25 THE COURT: Let me ask you this: Are there

1 not serious problems on a dismissal under Rule 48, 2 because it seems to me that Rule 48 does not empower 3 the Court to dismiss or to vacate a conviction and 4 dismiss the indictment after a conviction.

5 MR. STONE: Well, Your Honor, the law is 6 quite clear, and the most recent cases, the Weber case
7 from this very district that went to the Ninth 8 Circuit and we cite it, the Ninth Circuit had to 9 reverse a district judge from this district who 10 refused to vacate a Rule 48(a) request after an appeal
11 had been dismissed. Once that appeal was dismissed, 12 it's quite clear that that case had also been -- had 13 proceeded to final judgment. I believe there was a 14 conviction in that case as well.

15 Later, when the district judge refused to 16 do it, the Ninth Circuit reinstated that appeal. They 17 couldn't just take it back.

18 THE COURT: Can you tell me the facts of 19 that case, roughly?

20 MR. STONE: I believe that was a case where 21 several individuals were tried and convicted in this 22 district, and testimony came out for the first time 23 at trial which led the U.S. Attorney to believe that 24 despite the conviction of the jury, which he could not 25 say was not based on substantial evidence, and despite

1 the lack of any kind of misconduct, he nonetheless
2 wished to move to dismiss the case under Rule 48(a).
3 Notice of appeal had already been filed from the con-
4 viction, so he made that known to the Court of Appeals.

5 They did not simply remand the case. They 6 dismissed the appeal. After the dismissal of the 7 appeal, he went back in the District Court and said to 8 the District Court, "We'd like to dismiss this case."
9 The District Court, I guess, concerned that there were 10 no reasons of the type suggested here by Mr.
11 Hirabayashi's counsel, there were no misconduct of 12 prosecutor reasons or insufficiency of evidence reasons.
13 It was simply a termination by the U.S. Attorney that 14 he would rather not have prosecuted the case, refused 15 that request.

16 That refusal was appealed and the original
17 appeal was reinstated by the Ninth Circuit; reinstatement 18 because it was clearly too late to file the notice
19 of appeal again, and they reversed that. They said 20 that it's clear that the prosecutor's power, it has 21 always been clear, and they cited some law there, 22 revised, for example, after conviction and sentencing 23 on, for example, appeal, or after appeal on petition 24 for certiorari.

25 THE COURT: What about the situation in this

1 case where there is a trial, an appeal to the Ninth
2 Circuit which then certifies it to the Supreme Court, 3 who then affirms it. Does this Court then have any 4 power at the request of the Government to vacate that 5 conviction and dismiss the underlying indictment?

6 MR. STONE: Well, I think it does, Your 7 Honor, by virtue of what has happened here. I don't 8 think I could have walked in here to you independently
9 so many months ago and simply said "I'd like to make a 10 Rule 48(a) motion on a case there has been no activity
11 on." But as long as coram nobis is indeed a valid post-12 conviction motion in a criminal case, and it has been 13 filed, and Your Honor has found it sufficient to require 14 the Government to respond, as has happened here, at that 15 point once again the prosecutorial assist has been 16 passed to the Government.

17 We have been asked to be involved in a case.
18 Had you simply dismissed it without our involvement as 19 district judges do routinely in 2255 cases in habeas 20 corpus cases, we would have had no role to play. But 21 we have had a role to play. Indeed, I personally have 22 had a very substantial role. I have spent months 23 examining old files, old prosecutorial memos, having 24 to learn about what happened in the Supreme Court some 25 forty years ago. I have written numerous memos which

1 ultimately will play a part in whether we wish to 2 continue defending our prosecuting, much as I would if 3 you had just decided to allow them a late appeal.

4 Consequently, just as in the Weber case
5 where, after the appeal was dismissed and the district 6 judge in effect says to the Government, "You are still 7 involved in this case," and the Government says, "Well, 8 if I'm still involved, I move to dismiss." Similarly 9 here, I'm being called upon, Your Honor, to answer. If 10 my motion is denied, I guess like in the Weber case, 11 it may be that the Department will want to find out 12 whether it should have been denied.

13 But assuming it had to be denied, the next 14 step will be you will require me, no doubt, to conduct 15 a hearing and maybe later a trial, if someone decides 16 to go forward.

17 I think it's beyond dispute that once I'm 18 put to the burden of conducting a trial, I can move 19 to dismiss under Rule 48(a). Consequently, it is the 20 action of the petitioners and the Court reinvolving 21 the Government which allows us, we believe, and the 22 Supreme Court precedents do not suggest the contrary.
23 They certainly don't hold the contrary. Under those 24 unique circumstances, once we are reinvolved and our 25 resources are again called upon, that is our call,

1 assuming that the interests of justice warrant, to make 2 that motion and have the Court follow it.

3 Now, the additional point that I made and 4 what I filed to Your Honor was if there were any 5 question, it seems to us quite clear that the "All 6 Writs Act" gives the Court an awful lot of discretionary 7 power not simply limited to that one variety of the 8 All Writs Act power called coram nobis. The Court 9 has many other kinds of powers.

10 Our problem with coram nobis basis is the 11 jurisdiction is coram nobis presupposes a factual
12 mistake which makes a difference, which made a 13 difference to the outcome of the case, and notwith-14 standing Judge Battell's holding to the contrary, she 15 need not have found and she did not find that anything 16 alleged made any difference or would have made any 17 difference. She said she could not and did not have 18 to find that it made any difference to the outcome of 19 the case.

20 THE COURT: Why did she say that? Did she 21 give a reason for that?

22 MR. STONE: She simply relied on a case
23 called United States v. Taylor, which is a Ninth 24 Circuit case that was brought to the Ninth Circuit
25 where a district judge denied a hearing on coram

1 nobis, and before those words which she cites the 2 Ninth Circuit says "We recognize in this case that if 3 the allegations are true, it clearly would have been 4 harmful and changed the outcome of the trial in those 5 circumstances."

6 That kind of allegation of Government mis-
7 conduct is enough to get to a hearing, and they then 8 reaffirmed in a footnote that in order to actually 9 grant relief after a hearing, the standards promulgated 10 in Morgan that harm and a different outcome - the 11 judge's conclusion would be a different outcome - it 12 would be necessary to grant relief.

13 But they were talking in a different context.
14 She has construed it, decided that it gives us some 15 leeway, but we don't see any other cases that rule 16 that way and, frankly, she is attempting to make some 17 new law there which it seems to me would open the door 18 to a huge number of inmates or ex-inmates, defendants, 19 who wish for a variety of reasons, possibly now they 20 would like to be free of the felony conviction which 21 prohibits them from carrying a gun, or whatever, to 22 come in here and ask the Court to review questions 23 which they would not have to show the Court could have 24 made a difference to the outcome of the case.

25 So we have institutional reasons why, for

1 reasons that go way beyond this case, we don't think 2 that rule is a sound one, and indeed the Supreme Court 3 has only recently said in the Hasting case in the 4 Supreme Court that harmless errors are not the stuff
5 of which reversals even on direct appeal are made.

6 So we cannot urge the Court to follow Judge
7 Battell's ruling jurisdictionally, but we do know that 8 substantively we found it was not appropriate to make 9 findings, factual findings, conduct hearings, make any 10 legal rulings as to issues of law long decided. She 11 said that while she is happy to say she's not very 12 happy with the decision in the original Korematsu-13 Hirabayashi-Yasui cases, they are nonetheless the 14 precedent that would need to be extinguished in a 15 future case because she has no power to overrule those 16 legal holdings, certainly not in the context of the 17 misconduct thresholding query, and consequently she 18 decided that she could dispose of the case without a 19 hearing.

20 She found that there was sufficient public
21 interest without reaching any conclusion about mis-
22 conduct. That's how we read that opinion. We believe 23 she would have had to hold a hearing if she wished to 24 make that kind of a decision.

25 Again, --

1 THE COURT: I might say this to you, that 2 my personal feeling is that I must hold a hearing;
3 that I can't take judicial notice of all of these 4 things that have been brought to my attention, and I 5 recognize that a great number of them are probably 6 accurate, but I just don't think that I can take 7 judicial notice of those things and would therefore, 8 if I decided to go the route of coram nobis, set down 9 a hearing at which factual findings and evidence would 10 be presented, probably mostly in terms of exhibits, 11 and then factual findings made.

12 Now, if I granted coram nobis, and say I 13 found that there were grounds, I would assume that the 14 only thing I could do would be to set aside the con-15 viction and retry it.

16 MR. STONE: That's right, Your Honor. I 17 think that's right.

18 THE COURT: Can you retry it? I think the 19 statute itself has been repealed.

20 MR. STONE: Well, there is a general savings 21 clause. We could retry it. I think we have the 22 authority, if somebody really wanted to. I cannot 23 envision it, but I am not being faced with that 24 decision. I don't formally have to make it now, but 25 I think yes, any case which is set aside can be retried.

1 I believe it was the state of New Jersey
2 that recently tried a prize fighter, Rueben Hurricane 3 Carter, after twenty years when his conviction was set 4 aside on coram nobis.

5 I really think at that point you have re-6 activated the criminal case and our jurisdiction does 7 not depend on anything new.

8 THE COURT: I think you said that if I
9 would do that, then at least you think possibly the 10 Government would then act under Rule 48 and move to 11 dismiss.

12 MR. STONE: Well, we would certainly make 13 the motion again, Your Honor, and again, that pre-14 supposes that we wouldn't in the meantime, that the 15 Solicitor General wouldn't decide in his wisdom whether 16 or not we should have gone to the Court of Appeals
17 before that and tried to get that Rule 48(a) denial
18 overturned, just as they did in Weber. They went up 19 to the Court of Appeals when the district judge didn't 20 want to grant the Rule 48(a).

21 Again, I would add your inclination not to 22 take judicial notice was also followed by Judge 23 Battell who did not take judicial notice and who felt, 24 unfortunately, that the requests made of her go to 25 the ultimate issue and therefore they would require trial.

1 THE COURT: I didn't read her opinion
2 carefully because I really didn't want to be influenced 3 by what she said, but as I did read it, it seemed to 4 me she said that even though I won't take judicial 5 notice, she almost, in effect, did take judicial 6 notice.

7 MR. STONE: Well, I will not hesitate to 8 admit to the Court that she said an awful lot of 9 things which I guess I feel constrained to call 10 dicta because she made some definite statements that 11 she would not make findings of fact, and I have to 12 conclude -- and that she would not take judicial notice 13 and I therefore have to conclude that the things she 14 said after that are dicta. That has to be my position.

15 I will point out, irrespective of what 16 happened there, and irrespective of how the Court 17 ultimately does go here, we think that there are these 18 other jurisdictional problems about whether anything 19 was newly discovered, whether anything would make any 20 difference to the ultimate outcome, whether in fact 21 all of these same issues were raised in 1942 and the 22 Supreme Court decided not to send the case back and 23 thereby decided these issues.

24 So we think that there are many jurisdic-
25 tional problems which we do not waive, and we think

1 there are many problems with the Commission's report,
2 so that while we freely acknowledge it exists, there
3 are many facts in there we would wish to contest,
4 Your Honor. I make no bones about that. That's why 5 we think you should see the addendum caused the vice-6 chairman of the Commission, the only active congressman 7 of all the commissioners, to say that he had severe 8 reservations about some of their factual conclusions.
9 His ultimate feeling that a mistake was made was not 10 changed, but it still gave him some pause.

11 We know that Mr. Hirabayashi certainly would 12 not expect us to make the kinds of untried allegations 13 about other individuals, many of whom are still alive, 14 in order to give him the relief that he feels may 15 becloud him, and so we would feel constrained by those 16 obligations to go forward if the Court has no other 17 jurisdictional problems.

18 THE COURT: All right. Then let me do 19 this. I think you probably have stated the Government's 20 position, have you not, on your motion?

21 MR. STONE: Yes, I have, Your Honor.

22 THE COURT: And as I understand it, your 23 motion is - and it's in the pleadings - is to vacate 24 the conviction and dismiss the underlying indictment?

25 MR. STONE: That's right. It is a

1 misdemeanor but it was an indictment, and essentially 2 we believe that the public reasons, the public interest
3 reasons, are those which were pretty clearly stated
4 by both the Commission and President Ford in 1976
5 at the urging of the Japanese-American community, and 6 the Congress when they repealed the underlying statute 7 here, and those were that many mistakes were made,
8 and sometimes that causes people in power to decide 9 that perhaps they should not have handled things the 10 way they did, and that may be the basis of a Rule 48(a) 11 motion just like in the Weber case.

12 THE COURT: All right. Let me ask the 13 Petitioner's counsel, then, why shouldn't I grant the 14 Government's motion? Doesn't that give this petitioner 15 all the relief that he wants, which is to have a con-16 viction set aside, all of the adverse effects of that 17 conviction removed from him?

18 MS. BANNAI: Your Honor, to the extent that 19 the Government agrees that Mr. Hirabayashi's convic-20 tion should be vacated and the indictment dismissed, 21 we are in agreement indeed.

22 However, Mr. Hirabayashi seeks and I believe 23 is entitled to, under a petition for writ of error 24 coram nobis, an independent judicial review of his 25 case and an explanation of the reasons supporting

1 vacation in his case through an opinion of the Court 2 or entry of findings.

3 We ask the Court in that process to 4 acknowledge that he was denied his constitutional 5 rights to a fair trial and appeal in his case.

6 With regard to the 48(a) motion, it is our 7 position, and I believe it is supported by the case
8 law, the case of Weber notwithstanding, that a 48(a)
9 motion is not appropriate in this case. The Government 10 cites no authority that 48(a) is properly applied in 11 a post-conviction coram nobis proceeding.

12 Mr. Hirabayashi has been convicted,
13 sentenced, and exhausted all of his appeals, and now 14 brings this case to the Court by way of request that 15 an extraordinary writ, a petition for writ of error 16 coram nobis be issued.

17 In addition, the Government cites no
18 authority to support its proposition that a Court
19 could, independent, could grant a Rule 48(a) motion 20 to dismiss without an individual judicial inquiry into 21 the facts supporting the vacation of the conviction.

22 What this would entail is an examination
23 of the public interest reasons supporting the dis-24 missal, and if Your Honor would allow, I would like 25 to be able to discuss why we believe that Rule 48(a)

1 is not appropriate in this case.

2 THE COURT: I would like to have you do
3 that, and you might also discuss what the Government
4 counsel spoke about and that is, say I granted the writ, 5 then, since we now have it back in this court, would 6 the Government not then have the power to come in and 7 to move for dismissal? Or if we had a hearing and say 8 from the beginning of the hearing the Government might 9 move to dismiss.

10 MS. BANNAI: I would just like to deal with 11 that immediately and state that Mr. Harabayashi is here
12 today seeking that his petition for writ of error 13 coram nobis be granted. Indeed, if this entails the 14 necessity of an evidentiary hearing, Mr. Hirabayashi 15 will proceed along those lines, and that is his primary 16 objective at this time.

17 It may be that the Government then would be 18 able to, if the Government chose to reinstitute a 19 prosecution of Mr. Hirabayashi to then perhaps indeed 20 move to dismiss under Rule 48(a), and we would of 21 course in that circumstance want some additional time
22 to present supplemental pleadings to the Court.

23 Your Honor, petitioner's argument will be 24 divided between myself and Mr. Camden Hall. I will 25 generally address the reasons why Mr. Hirabayashi

1 requests the Court deny the Government's motion to 2 dismiss and why it is appropriate for the Court to 3 grant Mr. Hirabayashi's petition for writ of error
4 coram nobis.

5 Mr. Hall will rebut the constitutional
6 issues concerning this Court's jurisdiction raised by 7 the Government in its supplemental points and 8 authorities, and address any other constitutional 9 issues raised by the petition that are of interest to 10 the Court.

11 THE COURT: Let me say this to you, and 12 maybe this will be for your benefit, too, Mr. Hall.
13 I am almost certain I would not grant the writ now, 14 that is, the thing that I would do if I go that 15 direction would be to set it down for trial, have 16 exhibits identified and a hearing held. I don't know 17 whether that changes the focus of your argument, but 18 I am certain that I would not take judicial notice of 19 all these things that have been presented to me.

20 Let me say to you, as I said before, I have 21 read almost every word of the things that have been 22 presented to me, but I just don't feel that I can take 23 judicial notice of it and grant the writ and set aside 24 the conviction at this hearing.

25 MS. BANNAI: Yes, Your Honor. The purpose

1 of my argument will be to try to convince the Court
2 that indeed the Government's motion to dismiss based 3 on Rule 48(a) should not be granted.

4 THE COURT: All right.

5 MS. BANNAI: Mr. Hall will address the 6 issue of constitutional jurisdiction, that is, why, as 7 asked by Your Honor, this case is not moot due to lack 8 of adverse collateral legal consequences.

9 In 1942, Gordon K. Hirabayashi challenged
10 the constitutionality of the curfew and exclusion 11 orders imposed on Americans of Japanese ancestry. He 12 believed that the judicial grant in its role as over-13 seer and protector of the Constitution would exonerate 14 him and proclaim that this country's constitutional 15 safeguards would apply to all citizens, regardless of 16 race.

17 Mr. Hirabayashi's petition for writ of 18 error coram nobis represents his continued and 19 persistent belief that the Court will reaffirm these 20 basic principles of equality and democracy. As the 21 Government has pointed out, the Executive and the 22 Legislative branches of the Government have taken steps 23 to acknowledge the injustices done to Americans of 24 Japanese ancestry.

25 However, the Executive and Legislative

1 branches of government have no power to address and 2 correct errors in the judicial proceedings which upheld
3 the constitutionality of the exclusion and incarceration
4 of Japanese-Americans from the West Coast.

5 Two of the three branches of government 6 have acknowledged the injustice perpetrated upon its 7 own citizens and have admitted error. The Judicial 8 branch of government, however, now has the opportunity 9 to rectify the injustice that was dealt to Mr.
10 Hirabayashi and to Americans of Japanese ancestry.

11 The Government has filed a motion to dismiss, 12 to vacate Mr. Hirabayashi's conviction and dismiss this 13 indictment. However, Mr. Hirabayashi seeks his relief 14 on the basis of his petition for writ of error coram 15 nobis and not on the basis asserted by the Government 16 in its motion.

17 The Government urges the Court to grant the 18 motion because it is a forty-year-old misdemeanor
19 conviction. It is time to put the controversy behind 20 us and no completely satisfactory answer can be reached 21 by the Court. The Government's motion, we believe, is 22 inappropriate.

23 The Government cites Rinaldi v. United States
24 and U. S. v. Hamm as a legal basis for its motion.
25 Both of these cases arose from motions brought pursuant

1 to Rule 48(a). The purpose of Rule 48(a) is to allow 2 the Government to terminate a prosecution. Such 3 authority is not without its limitations. Neither 4 under the common law antecedent of 48(a) nor under 5 48(a) does the Government have the opportunity to 6 unilaterally terminate a prosecution after a person 7 has been convicted and exhausted all of his appeals.

8 Since Mr. Hirabayashi has been convicted,
9 sentenced, and exhausted all of his appeals, the Court 10 should rule that 48(a) is not applicable to the present
11 case.

12 With regard to the Weber case, in that case 13 the Ninth Circuit dismissed the appeal on the basis of 14 the Ninth Circuit Court's understanding that the parties 15 would return to the trial court for entry of a dis-
16 missal under Rule 48(a). When the trial court denied 17 the Rule 48(a) motion, the Ninth Circuit reinstated the 18 original appeal and instructed the trial court to grant 19 the motion to dismiss.

20 I think that that is a different situation
21 than we find ourselves in here today. In that case 22 Mr. Weber was able to bring the case on appeal to the 23 Ninth Circuit which sent it back to the District Court.
24 In that case Mr. Weber was not seeking post-conviction 25 relief.

1 However, if the Court is inclined to grant
2 the Government's motion, the Court has a long-established 3 duty to conduct an independent review of the circum-
4 stances which are alleged to support vacation of the 5 conviction. The purpose of such a review is to protect 6 against prosecutorial impropriety and to insure that 7 the public interest is served.

8 THE COURT: Let me say this to you. The 9 Government comes in all the time and dismisses various 10 indictments and the Court really never makes an 11 examination of the underlying reasons because there is 12 a prosecutorial discretion to dismiss actions before 13 trial, and I know of no practice of the Court looking 14 into the reasons for it.

15 We defer to the Executive Branch on the 16 decision whether to prosecute or to dismiss, so that 17 if I should decide to go with the Government's motion, 18 I don't think that I would have the discretion or the 19 power to go behind the Government's exercise of dis-20 cretion. Do you think I should?

21 MS. BANNAI: Yes. I believe that the case
22 law establishes that the Government needs to present
23 substantial reasons that show that the public interest 24 would not be disserved by a dismissal of the case.
25 Of course our position is that 48(a) doesn't apply in

1 this case, that is, this is not a pretrial situation 2 or prejudgment situation. This is a petition on an 3 extraordinary writ.

4 In addition, we believe this is an extra-
5 ordinary case, and I will be addressing that issue.

6 We believe the Government hasn't addressed 7 in this case the public interest which we believe 8 exists independent of and in addition to Mr.
9 Hirabayashi's individual interest. We feel that the 10 reasons that the Government advances are just excuses.

11 We strenuously disagree with the Government's 12 reasons --

13 THE COURT: Don't you admit that this is a 14 different case, but wouldn't you agree with Government 15 counsel that the country as a whole has recognized the 16 injustice of the relocation program and has, to a large 17 extent, tried to make amends, and that the Government 18 is not -- I didn't have the feeling the Government was 19 just trying to make an excuse here in moving to dismiss?

20 MS. BANNAI: We feel that the Government 21 has presented some reasons indeed; that in fact the 22 Executive and the Legislative Branches have taken steps
23 to make amends. We feel, however, that Mr.
24 Hirabayashi's conviction, however, is not addressed
25 by the Executive and Legislative actions, and Mr. Hall

1 will be addressing the issue of collateral legal con-
2 sequences which we believe still flow to Mr. Hirabayashi
3 and which would make it important for this Court to 4 deny the Government's Rule 48(a) motion to dismiss.

5 THE COURT: Let me ask you, and maybe Mr.
6 Hall will address this, if I granted the Government's 7 motion, wouldn't the collateral consequences evaporate
8 just as if we had a coram nobis hearing and the judg-9 ment was set aside, the conviction was set aside, that 10 is, the collateral consequences?

11 MS. BANNAI: It is our belief that in order 12 for Mr. Hirabayashi to be clear of his collateral legal 13 consequences that indeed the petition for writ of error 14 coram nobis needs to be considered by this Court, and 15 the Court to make an independent judgment as to the 16 reasons supporting the vacation of the conviction 17 which would not be satisfied were the Court to merely 18 grant the Government's motion as it presently stands 19 and as set forth in the order submitted to the Court by 20 the Government.

21 Mr. Hirabayashi's convictions serve to hold
22 the constitutionality of the exclusion and incarceration
23 of 110,000 persons, solely on the basis of race and 24 national origin. It is not your typical forty-year-25 old misdemeanor by any stretch of the imagination.

1 The United States Constitution embodies 2 fundamental principles of equal treatment and justice.
3 These principles are challenged when American citizens
4 are herded into concentration camps without charges 5 brought, without trials, without representation of 6 counsel.

7 The deprivation of fundamental rights and 8 liberties to 110,000 people underscores the importance 9 of the legal issues we present to the Court today, and 10 also the importance of our petition for writ of error
11 coram nobis.

12 No factual basis existed to justify the 13 Government's exclusion program. As concluded by the 14 Commission of Wartime Internment and Relocation of 15 Civilians, this program was rooted in race prejudice, 16 war hysteria and absence of political leadership.
17 Hastily uprooted Americans suffered enormous economic 18 and personal losses. Allowed only to take what they 19 could carry with them, many lost their homes, businesses 20 and farms.

21 They also lost opportunity for education 22 and employment. Incarceration irrevocably harmed the 23 family relationships and cultural and social fabric of 24 the Japanese-American community. And now, forty years 25 later, the Government urges the Court to ignore the 1 human life and principles that were broken.

2 I would like to now discuss our view of the 3 conduct of Government officials during the prosecution
4 of Mr. Hirabayashi's case. I would take strong 5 exception to Mr. Stone's argument that petitioner has 6 admitted that the vast majority of materials we have 7 supplied to the Court in support of our coram nobis 8 petition in fact were available many years ago. That 9 simply is not the case, and I believe he is miscon-
10 struing our reply to the Government's supplemental 11 authorities and --

12 THE COURT: Let me say this to you. Just 13 as I feel that I cannot take judicial notice of the 14 materials themselves, neither will I take judicial 15 notice of the fact that they may have been available 16 at certain times in the past, so you don't need to be 17 concerned about that.

18 MS. BANNAI: Thank you, Your Honor.

19 The conduct of Government officials started 20 with the issuance of Executive Order No. 9066, and 21 continuing throughout the prosecution and appeal of 22 Mr. Hirabayashi's conviction was justified under the 23 dubious claim of military necessity. The Government, 24 however, had documents which directly refuted their 25 position. Their claim of military necessity was

1 invalid and untrue.

2 The Government intentionally withheld these 3 documents from both the petitioner and the Court, and 4 I will be discussing two examples of this. One I would 5 like to discuss is the Final Report of General DeWitt
6 and second I will be discussing the Ringle Report.

7 THE COURT: Well, on the Ringle Report, you 8 go ahead. This is the thing that concerns me and the 9 reason why I feel I would have to have a trial here.
10 The Final Report of DeWitt - and I may be wrong on 11 this - didn't come out until after the trial, and 12 perhaps not until after the Supreme Court hearing was 13 held. I'm not sure about that, but these time 14 sequences are things that certainly I would have to 15 address, when certain things became known to the 16 Government. I'm sure you understand that.

17 MS. BANNAI: Yes, indeed. It's a little 18 confusing because there was an original final report 19 which is discussed in our petition.

20 THE COURT: Then it's really the changing 21 of that report you point to primarily, isn't it?

22 MS. BANNAI: Yes, as well as the destruc-
23 tion of the original version of the report.

24 THE COURT: How did any copy ever survive?
25 I thought there were all sorts of affidavits that we've

1 burned every copy there is, and so on and so on.

2 MS. BANNAI: I understand that a certificate
3 of I guess proof of the destruction of the documents 4 in fact was found and that led to discovery of the 5 report itself. I realize it's a very difficult issue
6 factually. If the Court would prefer, I could discuss 7 that as well as the Ringle Report or simply discuss the 8 Ringle Report, if the Court feels that that issue is 9 not --

10 THE COURT: Why don't you just discuss them
11 briefly because I think I am fully aware of them, 12 aware of your position, but you go ahead.

13 MS. BANNAI: With regard to General DeWitt's 14 Final Report, Edward J. Ennis of the Department of 15 Justice was responsible for preparing the Government
16 brief to the Supreme Court in the Hirabayashi case.
17 He asked the War Department to send him General DeWitt's 18 Final Report for use in preparing the Government's 19 Supreme Court brief.

20 The original version of the Final Report 21 was completed in April of 1943. This was before the 22 Supreme Court decided the Hirabayashi case. However, 23 the War Department withheld the Final Report from the 24 Department of Justice until February of 1944 under the 25 guise of military classification.

1 The original Final Report contained DeWitt's
2 contention that regardless of the amount of time
3 spent, the Government would not be able to distinguish
4 loyal Japanese-Americans from disloyal Japanese-5 Americans.

6 THE COURT: And he said that time was no
7 problem.

8 MS. BANNAI: Right. DeWitt inferred that 9 because of the racial characteristics of Japanese-10 Americans, it would be impossible to make such dis-11 tinctions.

12 The Government's argument in the Hirabayashi
13 case was contrary. The Government argued that time 14 was of the essence and that the War Department had 15 acted reasonably in its exclusion program because many 16 months or perhaps years would be required for loyalty 17 investigations.

18 The Supreme Court adopted the Government's 19 argument and upheld the curfew order under review.
20 Had the court understood the real motivation for 21 exclusion, the Court's decision would have been 22 different than it was in the original Hirabayashi
23 case.

24 Furthermore, the War Department was keenly 25 aware of the significance of the "time is of the 1 essence" argument. When the War Department saw how 2 the original version would undermine its case, the 3 circulated draft was recalled and ordered destroyed.

4 War Department records were subsequently altered to 5 conceal receipt of the original version of the Final 6 Report.

7 A second document of great importance and 8 also not revealed to the Court was the Ringle Report.
9 This report was prepared by the Office of Naval 10 Intelligence. The Office of Naval Intelligence had 11 the responsibility to conduct surveillance of the 12 Japanese-American community.

13 Lieutenant Commander Ringle was charged with 14 this responsibility. Commander Ringle was an expert 15 in the Japanese language and culture. In his official 16 capacity, Ringle wrote a report that went to the heart 17 of the question of Japanese-American loyalty. He 18 reported that the identification of disloyal Japanese-19 Americans would be an easy task. If there were any 20 disloyal Japanese-Americans, they could be identified 21 either by name or club membership.

22 He concluded that no more than three per 23 cent of the Japanese-American population should be 24 under any suspicion. He reported that the so-called 25 "Japanese problem" had been magnified largely out of 1 proportion, largely because of racial characteristics;

2 that the Japanese-American problem was no more serious 3 than that of the German and Italian portions of the 4 U.S. population, and lastly, that Japanese-Americans 5 should be handled on an individual and not on a racial 6 basis.

7 THE COURT: Let me ask you, because I was 8 not able to clear this up in my own mind in the 9 records, but of this I know I am right, and that is 10 the Japanese-Americans in Hawaii were not under a 11 curfew restriction nor were they relocated.

12 MS. BANNAI: That's my understanding,
13 except on, I believe, a selective basis.

14 THE COURT: Some may have been arrested
15 and detained. In the United States, I know that no
16 native German-Americans, citizens, nor no Italian-17 Americans were relocated or under curfew except on a 18 selective basis.

19 MS. BANNAI: Right.

20 THE COURT: So it is only the Japanese
21 citizens on the West Coast who were relocated?

22 MS. BANNAI: Indeed an anomalous result
23 of German and Italian aliens received individual
24 loyalty hearings while American citizens received no 25 individual loyalty hearings resulted.

1 THE COURT: Is that right? I was unaware 2 of that, that there were individual hearings for 3 Italian-Americans and German-Americans. Was that 4 aliens or citizens?

5 MS. BANNAI: I believe for aliens, and I 6 believe so for citizens, also.

7 The assertions which I have just stated 8 undermine the position taken by the Government in its 9 legal briefs and oral argument in petitioner's case.
10 The Government made no mention of the Ringle Report.
11 In fact, it argued that the identities of the 12 potentially disloyal were not readily discoverable.

13 Mr. Ennis, as I stated, was responsible 14 for preparing the brief in the Hirabayashi case, and 15 stated in a memorandum to Solicitor General Fahey 16 that the Department of Justice may have a duty to 17 advise the Court of the existence of the Ringle Report.
18 He stated, and I quote, "In one of the crucial points 19 of the case, the Government is forced to argue that 20 individuals' selective evacuation would have been 21 impractical and insufficient when we have positive 22 knowledge that the only intelligence agency responsible 23 for advising General DeWitt gave him advice directly 24 to the contrary."

25 He further remarked that not to tell the

1 Court about the Ringle Report might approximate the 2 suppression of evidence.

3 THE COURT: Now, was that written before the 4 Hirabayashi appeal or was that before the Korematsu?

5 MS. BANNAI: I believe that the letter was 6 written - I don't have the date here. It was during 7 the Hirabayashi appeal and was written while Mr. Ennis 8 was preparing the brief in the Hirabayashi case, and 9 he was advising Solicitor General Fahey.

10 THE COURT: Is that right?

11 MS. BANNAI: This is the Exhibit Q which is 12 described in the affidavit of Peter Irons as one of the 13 newly discovered, examples of newly discovered docu-
14 ments, and certainly the significance of this letter
15 to Mr. Hirabayashi's case I think is quite apparent.

16 Other documents from agencies responsible 17 for intelligence gathering, including the FBI and the 18 FCC, corroborated the fact that there was no military 19 necessity. This information was withheld from the 20 petitioner and withheld from the Court.

21 Significantly the document which establishes 22 this conduct are all from the Government's own files.
23 The petition for writ of error coram nobis affords the 24 Court an opportunity to expunge its own records.

25 In United States v. Morgan, the Supreme

1 Court held that coram nobis is the appropriate remedy
2 to correct fundamental errors and under circumstances 3 requiring such action to achieve justice.

4 The misconduct we have cited in our petition, 5 the exhibits and other documents, was undertaken by 6 the Government at the expense of Mr. Hirabayashi's 7 constitutional rights to a fair trial and appeal in 8 this case, and at the expense of the integrity of the 9 judicial system.

10 This prosecutorial misconduct presents
11 a compelling circumstance and error of fundamental 12 character to warrant coram nobis relief. We believe 13 that the Court has an opportunity in this case to 14 articulate an expected standard of conduct for 15 Government officials, particularly in time of war 16 when liberties and individual rights should be more 17 ardently protected.

18 The Court has an opportunity to deter 19 unlawful and illegal conduct, particularly when the 20 Government imposes restrictions on easily identifiable 21 minority.

22 The Government's motion we believe is 23 without authority and should be denied by this Court.
24 We would ask that if the Court were disinclined to 25 take judicial notice of the facts and the documents

1 submitted in this case, and that the Court does not 2 feel it has sufficient record before it in order to 3 reach the merits of this petition, that this matter 4 be set for further hearings and proceedings to 5 culminate in a hearing on the merits of the petition
6 of Mr. Hirabayashi, petition for writ of error coram 7 nobis.

8 Thank you, Your Honor.

9 THE COURT: All right. Now, the court
10 reporter has been writing constantly, and is still 11 writing, since I guess 2 o'clock. So I'm going to 12 take a regular recess of fifteen minutes.

13 There are a few seats still over here.
14 I just hate to see people stand all through this 15 hearing. There are some seats on this front bench, 16 if you people will move a little bit closer together.
17 While I am gone, feel free to try to find a seat.

18 We will resume at 3:15.

19 (Recess.)

20 THE COURT: Mr. Hall.

21 MR. HALL: Your Honor, I would like to, at 22 the outset, thank you for giving us the opportunity 23 to make this presentation. I know it's --

24 THE COURT: Let me ask you this. I believe 25 that you or someone requested that Mr. Hirabayashi be

1 permitted to make a statement. Is there a time when 2 you want that to be done?

3 MR. HALL: At the conclusion of my pre-4 sentation.

5 THE COURT: At the conclusion of your argu-6 ment. All right.

7 MR. HALL: I know the proceedings before the 8 Court are somewhat unusual and probably none of us will 9 have an opportunity for good or ill again like the one 10 we have today or in this case.

11 I am honored to be a part of this case and 12 I am honored to be before the Court today. Also, I 13 would like to welcome Mr. Stone to Seattle. I have 14 gotten to know him a little bit over the course of 15 these proceedings and I think he is doing the job that 16 is required to be done and doing it admirably.

17 There is obviously great interest in this 18 case and it's more than a case really involving one 19 individual. I think we have to be candid in admitting 20 it has a fair amount of symbolic importance, and indeed 21 I think to some extent the reason that the room is 22 as filled as it is today gives testimony to that 23 symbolism.

24 I would like to, before entering into the 25 formal part of my hopefully brief presentation, to

1 address some of the questions the Court raised in 2 questioning a few minutes ago. At the outset the 3 Court asked Ms. Bannai to the effect that the Govern-
4 ment comes in all the time and moves to dismiss 5 indictments, and can the Court really go behind the 6 motivation of the Government and, in effect, question 7 prosecutorial discretion.

8 We believe, for example, under the authority 9 of cases such as Young v. United States, which has been 10 cited in this case, that even where the Government 11 confesses error in proceeding, and though it's 12 entitled to great weight, this does not relieve the 13 Court from its judicial obligation of examining 14 independently the errors so confessed.

15 Now, the Government here does not necessarily 16 confess errors, although I suppose one could make the 17 argument that in the posture of the pleadings, that is 18 in effect what has happened. I'm not going to make 19 that argument at the moment, but I don't think we've 20 waived that argument if it should be made or if we 21 should desire to make it later. The fact of the matter
22 is, when the Government comes in to dismiss an indict-23 ment, it's rare that there are what we might call 24 adverse collateral legal consequences which have 25 transpired as a consequence of the indictment affecting

1 the individual who is indicted. Here, however, we have 2 a significantly different situation where we not only 3 have an indictment. We have a trial, we have a con-
4 viction, we have appeals and we have sentences served,
5 and we have, as I will try to comment a little later, 6 a significant array of adverse collateral legal con-
7 sequences which have befallen Mr. Hirabayashi, and it 8 is for this reason, Your Honor, we believe most 9 respectfully to both the Court and to counsel, that the 10 Court has an obligation to do more than just accept 11 the Government's offer of vacation of the indictment.

12 THE COURT: Let me ask you this: What are 13 the collateral consequences that would be suffered by 14 Mr. Hirabayashi if the Government's motion were granted, 15 that is, other than those he presently suffers?

16 MR. HALL: To begin with, I think it is 17 important -- I think there is one collateral conse-18 quence, among many, that as a matter of fact, I just 19 thought of a few minutes ago. One of the last times
20 I appeared before this Court, although I have been here
21 many times, was with regard to the Seattle School
22 District busing case.

23 I was just this morning going through the 24 brief in that case to see if it had any information 25 that might be useful in this case, and I came across

1 the fact that in that case - it happened to be the 2 Korematsu case - was cited to the United States Supreme 3 Court as being an example of an instance where the 4 United States Supreme Court had approved of blatant
5 racial classification. Of course Korematsu cites
6 the Hirabayashi case, and so forth.

7 If the Court were to grant the Government's 8 motion, on the face of it, it would deprive the 9 petitioners in this case from the opportunity of 10 demonstrating to the Court and indeed to the world
11 that the grounds on which Mr. Hirabayashi were tried 12 and convicted and the grounds on which the appeals 13 were not granted were without merit and were in 14 violation of his due process, and here is the point 15 that I wish to make.

16 If the Court were to enter a written opinion 17 expressing the Court's findings on the issues, those 18 findings would find their way into Shepherd's Citator
19 and from this day forward and forevermore, any person 20 who wishes to cite Hirabayashi, and who is careful and 21 reads the Citator, will find that note to this decision 22 and will know that the facts upon which the United 23 States Supreme Court made its decision, for example, 24 if this were the Court's ruling, were twisted or 25 distorted in the process, affecting Mr. Hirabayashi's

1 trial.

2 That's just one example. It may be sort of 3 a mundane example but it's not an unimportant example 4 because what Mr. Hirabayashi is asking is really some-5 thing more than a personal vindication of this 6 situation, although that is certainly there. I think 7 what he is asking, in all due respect to Mr.
8 Hirabayashi, is to set the record straight, to at least 9 have the opportunity to present to the Court the facts 10 as we understand them, subject of course to the 11 Government's opportunity to rebut those facts, if it
12 so wishes, so that the Court can then make some rulings 13 and findings which hopefully will have at least some 14 precedential value. I know this isn't in Mr.
15 Hirabayashi's mind, but if that occurs then we go into 16 the Citator and become an opinion of record and the 17 Hirabayashi case would, to that much anyway, stand for 18 a lot less than it does today. That's one example.

19 There are other collateral legal conse-
20 quences which exist to some extent without regard to 21 whether the motion of the Government is granted. I 22 would like to get to those in a few minutes.

23 In addition, the Government, while it is 24 not offering a pardon, the comment was that if 25 President Truman had known in 1947 essentially what we

1 know today, he may have pardoned Mr. Hirabayashi.

2 Mr. Hirabayashi has never spoken about this,
3 but I would submit that in order to be pardoned for 4 something, you have to, in effect, be admitting that 5 you did something for which a pardon is appropriate, 6 and I believe, most respectfully again to the Govern-
7 ment and to the Court, that Mr. Hirabayashi's position 8 is he didn't do anything which is susceptible of pardon.

9 Of course we are aware of the legal 10 niceties that he has been convicted and there is a 11 United States Supreme Court decision, but there is a 12 moral principle here and that's why the issue of 13 pardon is one of some inflammatory note.

14 The Court did also ask when Exhibit Q, I 15 think it was, was authored, and I believe it was April 16 30th --

17 THE COURT: Which one is that? Which 18 exhibit is that?

19 MR. HALL: It is the letter from Mr. Ennis
20 to Mr. Fahey.

21 THE COURT: Oh, yes.

22 MR. HALL: April 30th, and for the Court's 23 information, the United States Supreme Court ruled in 24 the Hirabayashi case on June 21st, 1943.

25 THE COURT: I know the mandate issued in

1 July, July 20th of '43.

2 MR. HALL: Yes.

3 Now, with the Court's permission, I would 4 to begin my forman comments.

5 George Hirabayashi was born in Seattle in 6 1918. He is an American citizen and he was entitled 7 to all the privileges of citizenship, to life, liberty, 8 and the right to pursue happiness. These were, as 9 this Court knows and has said and articulated many 10 times, among the greatest gifts shared by man. They 11 form the very foundation of what is precious about 12 American citizenship, about what it means to be an 13 American.

14 Mr. Hirabayashi's birthright as an American 15 citizen entitled him to be judged by what he did; not 16 by who he was, his race, his parents' origin. It 17 should have made no difference if his parents were 18 Japanese.

19 Then, in the middle of his senior year at 20 the University of Washington, his life was truly
21 changed. The catharsis following December 7, 1941
22 created the change. Not only was that a day which 23 will live in infamy, it gave birth to infamous acts.
24 One such act was the decision of frightened people to 25 exclude all persons of Japanese extraction, citizens

1 and aliens alike, from certain parts of the Western 2 United States including Mr. Hirabayashi's home here in 3 Seattle.

4 I would like to underline at this point,
5 Your Honor, the issue that co-counsel mentioned a few 6 minutes ago, the anomalous situation where we had 7 foreign aliens of German or Italian extraction who 8 were entitled to various hearings and due process with 9 regard to what the Government would do to them after 10 the war broke out in Europe. Again, we had American 11 citizens of Japanese extraction in the United States
12 living on the West Coast who were denied those same 13 rights and due process activities.

14 Another infamous act, Your Honor, was the 15 decision by the same people to establish an 8 p.m. to 16 6 a.m. curfew. Mr. Hirabayashi in an act of personal 17 sacrifice and civil disobedience long before civil 18 disobedience was in vogue in this country, assuming 19 it ever was, and I think it probably is from time to 20 time, consciously and one might say even conscientiously, 21 disobeyed the curfew and refused to report to the 22 authorities as a preliminary step to his exclusion 23 from his home.

24 He was arrested, indicted, and tried by a 25 jury whose passions in time of war can only be guessed,

1 and convicted of violating the misdemeanor laws.
2 Gordon Hirabayashi, the Supreme Court said, had never 3 been to Japan; had never had any association with 4 Japanese residing there. He was sentenced nonetheless 5 to a prison term for three months on each charge, the 6 sentences to run concurrently.

7 He quickly appealed. The appeal was quickly
8 transferred to the United States Supreme Court which, 9 acting on the information essentially supplied to it 10 by the Government because the Government was in the 11 sole and exclusive control of the information that 12 affected the underlying statute, the presidential 13 proclamation, the proclamations and directives of 14 General DeWitt, affirmed Mr. Hirabayashi's conviction.

15 Last night I read again the Hirabayashi
16 case, and it's a difficult case to read because it says
17 so many things that don't apply any more in the juris-18 prudence that you and I practice today in 1984. It 19 talks about the fact that Japanese citizens have by 20 law been excluded from doing many things, including 21 in some cases by some state laws, marrying people other 22 than Japanese individuals. It talks about the fact 23 that Japanese were precluded from certain -- even 24 citizens were precluded from certain activities that 25 were shared by other citizens. And, of course, it

1 talks about Gordon Hirabayashi.

2 During the argument before the Supreme Court, 3 the Government, despite its clear knowledge to the 4 contrary, and co-counsel has mentioned this, kept 5 secret not only from Mr. Hirabayashi and his attorneys
6 but also, most significantly, from the Court itself,
7 certain information which counsel has iterated and I 8 won't reiterate.

9 The Government knew that this information, 10 that the representations that it was making to this 11 Court were either not true or significantly in doubt, 12 and yet did not share that information with the Court.

13 We believe, based upon a reading of the 14 Hirabayashi case, which relied very strongly on the 15 Government's representations - the Court has already 16 alluded to one representation that the Court relied 17 upon which is found at page 99 of the United States
18 Report - that the judgment of the military authorities 19 and Congress that there were disloyal members of the 20 Japanese population whose numbers and strength could 21 not be precisely and quickly ascertained, was an 22 important element in the finding of the Court.

23 The Court says at the end of its decision, 24 shortly before the dissent, or rather the concurring 25 opinions of Justice Douglas and others, that the

1 Government had done what it was required to do because 2 the military commander, in light of the knowledge then 3 available, had acted properly. Of course the Supreme 4 Court, believing that the knowledge then available was 5 that which the Government was telling it existed, made 6 these rulings.

7 We believe that at the very least, it was a 8 breach of faith with the Court, if not an ethical 9 breach, and at the very most it was a denial of Mr.
10 Hirabayashi's due process rights in his ability to 11 defend himself not only before the trial court but also 12 before the Supreme Court.

13 Now, almost forty years, forty-two years to 14 the day after the United States Supreme Court ruled, 15 Mr. Hirabayashi asks this Court to correct the past 16 errors which have placed a brand of infamy upon his 17 brow.

18 Now, we don't ask this Court today to grant
19 a writ of coram nobis. In effect, during the recess 20 one of the attorneys working this case reminded me, 21 and I think it's an excellent way to put this, our 22 position at this point, in effect what we're doing
23 today is making an offer of proof. We are in effect 24 telling the Court that if we have a hearing on the 25 issue of whether a writ of coram nobis should be

1 granted, this is the proof which we will offer.

2 We ask for an evidentiary hearing on the
3 issue of whether a writ of coram nobis should be 4 granted in order to do more than just offer the proof 5 but to try to make the proof, subject of course to the 6 opportunity of the Government to respond. If the writ
7 of coram nobis is granted, then the Court will pre-8 sumably have to make some kind of findings and con-9 clusions in support of its decision.

10 If at that point the Government wishes to, 11 through whatever prosecutorial prerogatives it has, to 12 determine we're not going to prosecute Mr. Hirabayashi, 13 that's fine. We may - I can't commit my co-counsel
14 and my client, of course, at this point - we may agree 15 at that point in the proceedings to say fine, we're 16 not anxious to be prosecuted, either, but we are 17 anxious to get to that point and hope that the Court 18 can see its way toward giving us the opportunity to 19 present the evidence so that the Court can make findings 20 and so that the Shepherd Citator can at least be 21 corrected.

22 But it goes beyond the Shepherd Citator.
23 Counsel has stated, and properly so, I think, because 24 it's certainly a point which ought to be before the 25 Court, that this case is not properly before the Court

1 because it does not present a case or controversy as 2 is required by Article III of the United States
3 Constitution.

4 We believe to a large extent that issue is 5 disposed of by reference to the Sibron case which we 6 called the Court's attention to, and even by reference 7 to the Lane case, which was cited essentially by the 8 Government, which cites to the Sibron case. The 9 Sibron case says in a nutshell that it's an obvious 10 fact of life that most criminal convictions do in 11 fact entail adverse collateral legal consequences, 12 and the Sibron case goes on to state that the mere 13 "possibility" that this will be the case, is enough to 14 preserve a criminal case from ending inagminously in 15 the limbo of mootness.

16 According to Sibron, in a case seeking 17 judicial review of deprivation of constitutional rights, 18 they are not made moot because the sentence has been 19 completed, and indeed, the courts have ruled, including 20 our own Ninth Circuit, in the Chavez case, among 21 others, that the burden of overcoming the presumption 22 of adverse collateral legal consequences is borne by 23 the Government.

24 We most respectfully maintain to both the 25 Court and counsel that the Government has not proved

1 that adverse legal consequences do not derive from the 2 expereince to which Mr. Hirabayashi has been subjected.

3 Now, the Williams case, or the Lane case,
4 rather, has been distinguished in our papers. Briefly, 5 we believe it doesn't reply because there the 6 respondents only attacked the sentences that were in 7 issue and the sentences expired, and indeed, in that 8 case, as the Court points out, the respondents never 9 attacked either the substantive or procedural grounds 10 with regard to the parole issue which was really the 11 main issue in the case.

12 Furthermore, the legal consequences which 13 implode from the events affecting the respondents, 14 their parole and so forth, were very narrowly circum-
15 scribed by the statutes of the state of Illinois.
16 And as I said earlier, the Court goes on to say that 17 the Lane case is not a Sibron type of a case, and 18 goes on to talk about Sibron, what a Sibron type of 19 case is, and we respectfully believe Sibron is the law 20 which is more applicable in this case rather than Lane.

21 In any event, the existing collateral
22 legal consequences which are visited upon Mr. Hirabayashi 23 include the following, for example: He indicated in 24 his affidavit filed with this Court that he was denied 25 the opportunity to sit on a jury some years ago. He

1 tried to call Judge Bowen, whom I know Your Honor knew,
2 because Judge Bowen was the presiding judge. Of course
3 Judge Bowen wouldn't tell him why Mr. Hirabayashi was 4 disqualified from the panel, and Mr. Hirabayashi only 5 speculates and, in all candor, it's a lot more than 6 speculation. I think that the reason that he was not 7 allowed to be on the jury panel had something to do 8 with his notoriety.

9 In addition, and more immediate, and indeed 10 in a sense more pathetic, is the fact that to this day, 11 or at least as of October of last year after this law-
12 suit became a reality --

13 THE COURT: I think I saw the letter.

14 MR. HALL: -- an individual who I don't 15 believe signed his name, or her name --

16 THE COURT: Did not.

17 MR. HALL: -- wrote to Mr. Hirabayashi and,
18 among other things, talked about what "your people did" 19 and made comments that I don't think bear repeating in 20 the record at the present time. The fact of the 21 matter is, the stigma that Mr. Hirabayashi suffers to 22 this day is to, I think some extent, articulated in the 23 animus that motivated that kind of a letter.

24 We believe that with an opportunity to, if 25 we may use the term, set the record straight, that this

1 kind of stigma and this kind of reaction to Mr.
2 Hirabayashi as an individual and as a member of a group 3 would be significantly dissipated if not totally 4 annihilated.

5 Counsel has maintained, and I think very well 6 again, that there is no way to prove that whatever 7 stigma or whatever collateral legal consequences Mr.
8 Hirabayashi today suffers derived from the misdemeanor
9 convictions as opposed to the hard felony conviction, 10 which is a part of Mr. Hirabayashi's past, and it's our 11 position, Your Honor, most respectfully, that the 12 felony conviction, while it was pardonable many, many 13 years ago, received virtually no notoriety. The 14 notoriety that has accrued or has befallen Mr.
15 Hirabayashi is a result of the misdemeanor conviction 16 and the proceedings that existed then and the United 17 States Supreme Court decision, and we think therefore 18 it is virtually conclusive that --

19 THE COURT: Can you answer this for me? I 20 think it might have been in the record. How many 21 persons were there who did as Mr. Hirabayashi did, 22 refused to obey the curfew order or refused to report?

23 MR. HALL: I frankly don't know. I know
24 there were more than just three or four, but we know 25 the three or four individuals who --

THE COURT: Who were convicted.

MR. HALL: -- who were convicted and who were the standardbearers.

I think at a certain point since the law was made - this is speculation again on my part - at a certain point after the Hirabayashi, Mitsui and Korematsu cases, if there were other convictions coming along it was sort of difficult to argue that new law should be made in the face of the Supreme Court, United States Supreme Court decisions. Decisions based on information which was, shall we say, less than candid, or less than candidly presented by the Government.

In addition, as to further collateral or potential collateral legal consequences, as the Court knows, numerous state laws provide that admissions in court of misdemeanor convictions can be used for impeachment. Now, we don't know if Mr. Hirabayashi is going to have the misfortune of being in court on some other occasion and somehow his past history is going to be used for impeachment, and yet this is an infirmity that doesn't light my feet. It doesn't light counsel's feet. We've never been convicted of a misdemeanor violation. If we go to court as a defendant or as a witness, no one can impeach us by virtue of our past

1 misdemeanor convictions, and yet Mr. Hirabayashi stands
2 on a different footing from us and we respectfully
3 believe that he shouldn't have to, Your Honor.

4 Even the Government concedes that Mr.
5 Hirabayashi's past convictions may be considered by 6 a sentencing judge in a subsequent proceeding, and 7 again we don't suggest that Mr. Hirabayashi is going 8 to have to be sentenced. And yet it's a badge of 9 infamy, if I may use that term, which he carries with 10 him which you and I and counsel don't carry with us 11 because we've never been through what he's had to go 12 through.

13 We believe, respectfully, Your Honor, that 14 Mr. Hirabayashi has demonstrated this case is not moot.
15 In effect, so too has the Government, demonstrated the 16 case is not moot. This again goes to the Article III
17 case or controversy issue. The Government cannot first 18 refuse to acknowledge its own misconduct, which I take 19 it is the position of the Government, or the uncon-20 stitutionality of its acts, which I again take it is 21 the position of the Government, and then be heard to 22 trumpet that there is no reasonable likelihood that 23 similar violations will not occur.

24 I know Mr. Stone won't be responsible for 25 similar violations, and I presume tht many, many

1 people won't be responsible for similar violations, 2 but in the face of the Government's refusal to in 3 effect say "mea culpa," we believe that the possi-
4 bility exists and that this Court has an opportunity 5 to influence the future, if you will, do its part to 6 assure that future violations of this sort do not 7 again persist.

8 Mr. Hirabayashi seeks complete judicial 9 vindication; not merely an advisory opinion of the 10 Court. To date, as counsel has said, it's only the 11 judicial branch of Government which has not purged 12 its record, and we believe that this Court has an 13 opportunity to at least partially accomplish that and 14 to provide us with an opportunity to present the evi-15 dence as to why the record should be purged.

16 To the extent the Government offers no
17 admission or explanation, since it does not address 18 the merits of Gordon Hirabayashi's allegations, these 19 proceedings are adversary. Indeed, through its failure 20 to respond to the merits of the petition in this case, 21 the Government gives the appearance of seeking to 22 subvert the truth-finding process and to erect a stone 23 wall around its prior misconduct.

24 Mr. Hirabayashi has exercised due diligence
25 in bringing this action. Counsel has, I think,

1 addressed that point and I won't mention it further.
2 We believe further, Your Honor, that the Government 3 should be estopped from asserting the defense of 4 laches due to its own clean hands. At the very least, 5 before the Government is heard to assert laches, we 6 believe an evidentiary hearing is required to see if 7 the Government's hands are clean or not so that it has 8 an opportunity to make that assertion.

9 This action raises issues of fundamental 10 character relating to Gordon Hirabayashi's constitutional 11 rights to due process, equal protection of the laws, 12 and a full and fair trial. It also addresses issues
13 concerning a pattern of serious governmental misconduct 14 or allegations thereof, concealment or destruction of 15 relevant exculpatory evidence in a criminal proceeding 16 affecting Mr. Hirabayashi.

17 Today, Your Honor, the Court asks this 18 Court -- today, Your Honor, Mr. Hirabayashi asks this 19 Court to deny the Government's effort to frustrate his 20 petition and to cast aspersions on the rectitude of 21 his position. He asks this Court to permit him to 22 eradicate not only the stain which men clothed in the 23 robes of Government have placed on his life, but also 24 the stain they have spread on the fabric of our nation.

25 To accomplish this will not only require a

1 dismissal of his indictments and convictions but a 2 well-founded judicial conclusion that what our 3 government did to Gordon Hirabayashi was wrong; that 4 it was more than any American citizen should be 5 required to bear. It remains a mistake, as the 6 Government has admitted, and that it was, in effect, 7 an infamous act.

8 Yes, Gordon Hirabayashi even asks more than 9 this, however. Simply put, he asks that this Court 10 participate in a process which will assure him and 11 all future persecuted and unpopular minorities that 12 because they are unpopular, that because they do not 13 have sufficient power, our Government will not and 14 cannot deprive them of their freedom and constitutional 15 birthright. This is what this case is about.

16 I thank the Court and I would like to have 17 this opportunity, if you don't have any questions, to 18 present Mr. Hirabayashi.

19 THE COURT: I do not have.

20 All right. Before I do call on Mr.
21 Hirabayashi, Mr. Barnett, after the petitioner speaks, 22 since you were in on this case from the very beginning,
23 I think, I would be happy to hear from you. I know 24 you were co-counsel. I would be happy to hear from 25 you if you have anything to say.

1 MR. HALL: Mr. Barnett has been of a great 2 deal of assistance to us.

3 THE COURT: I am sure he has.

4 MR. BARNETT: Just this, Your Honor, that 5 this was the original Court of error. The case was 6 tried here. The witnesses were heard here. Judge 7 Black overruled the demurrer which called on the 8 Government to specify the facts upon which a citizen
9 of the United States could be indicted.

10 Had he sustained that demurrer, the Army
11 would have had to come forward with the proof it did 12 not have, which is what is admitted now. That's the 13 main point I want to make now.

14 THE COURT: Were you in on the original
15 trial?

16 MR. BARNETT: Yes, I was, Your Honor.

17 THE COURT: You were co-counsel?

18 MR. BARNETT: I was a witness but I was not 19 listed as co-counsel because it looked like I would be 20 in conflict. Another witness, Your Honor, was Floyd 21 Small, who sits against the wall. Floyd, will you 22 stand?

23 And I don't know, Your Honor, that Gordon
24 Hirabayashi was introduced.

25 THE COURT: No; he was introduced.

1 MR. BARNETT: I am a trial lawyer, Your 2 Honor, and I know Your Honor was a trial lawyer. When 3 we go into the trial the Court will find defects which 4 will give the Court a basis to find error to support
5 the claims of Hirabayashi for a coram nobis petition 6 eradicating his sentence.

7 Now, in the supplemental brief by counsel
8 for the Government, he cites the Supreme Court con-
9 viction of Hirabayashi as though it was still law.
10 This Court has the challenge of the century to right
11 a case in which the Supreme Court will not overlook 12 the constitution of the United States nor will any 13 more trial courts do it in the absence of proof.

14 THE COURT: All right.

15 Mr. Hirabayashi?

16 THE PETITIONER: Your Honor, my name is 17 Gordon Hirabayashi. I am the petitioner in this case.
18 I wish to thank the Court for this opportunity to make 19 a statement.

20 During World War II, as an American of 21 Japanese ancestry, I had the constitution to protect 22 me. Nevertheless, I was sent to prison for trying to 23 live like other Americans. The others of Japanese 24 ancestry were summarily uprooted and incarcerated en 25 masse into internment camps, purely on grounds of their ancestry.

While constitutional guarantees existed in 1942 and '43, public institutions did not have the will nor the inclination to uphold them. It was devastating to me to witness my government committing act after act stripping me from my constitutional rights.

Because of the stand I took in 1942, I have continuously had to defend my actions and prove my loyalty. We have filed a petition for a writ of error coram nobis because I had felt the Supreme Court decision was a black mark on constitutional law. As a citizen, I considered it my responsibility to contribute toward the establishment of respect and honor for the constitution.

Moreover, I wish to have the United States continue to be regarded as a model for democracy, particularly among the newly emerging countries in the Third World where I researched and taught during the first decade of my professional career.

It is ironic that while I, among others, brought to these areas the attractions of American democracy, they wanted to know why America would imprison its own citizens for being of a particular ancestry. With great effort I was able to make a

1 positive response, declaring my continuing faith in 2 the American system of justice and my belief that there 3 would come a day when the injustices suffered would be 4 acknowledged and the conviction overturned.

5 On the personal side, Your Honor, I have 6 filed a petition to clear my name of the stigma of 7 questionable loyalty to the United States. I believe 8 it is important to assume active responsibilities of 9 citizenship. My citizenship is something I deeply 10 cherish.

11 One of the duties of citizenship is voting, 12 and I have voted in all of the presidential elections
13 since I became eligible to vote. The constitution 14 which guarantees the rights and privileges are mere 15 scraps of paper unless citizens are prepared to uphold 16 them, especially during crises when it counts the most.

17 When confronted with the option of obeying
18 the Government orders or to violate them, I had no
19 choice but to disobey. My whole philosophy of life 20 and motive to maintain good citizenship demanded that 21 I uphold the constitutional guarantees. The alternative 22 to prison was to give up on American principles.

23 Preparatory to my District Court trial in 24 October, 1942, the Government subpoenaed my parents 25 from Tulle Lake Concentration Camp to testify as its

1 witnesses. The Government's intent was to demonstrate 2 that my parents were born in Japan; that they had 3 emigrated from Japan; that therefore I was of Japanese 4 ancestry and thus subject to Western Defense Command 5 proclamations.

6 My legal committee at the time, including 7 Art Barnett, had offered to house my parents, even 8 though they were Government witnesses. When the 9 Government hesitated, a suggestion was made to deputize 10 the hosts so that technically my parents would be under 11 protective custody. These offers were refused and my 12 parents were confined to jail for ten days.

13 I relate this incident for two reasons.
14 First, the Government was totally unconcerned about my 15 constitutional rights. The Government wanted to win 16 at all cost to justify its treatment of Americans of 17 Japanese ancestry. Secondly, the gross callousness in 18 which they treated my parents after bringing them to 19 Seattle, depressed and shocked me to the core. The 20 confining of my parents in jail is a scar that I carry 21 to this day.

22 At my District Court trial in October, 1942, 23 Judge Black gave this instruction to the jury, and here
24 I am paraphrasing. "You can forget all that discussion 25 about the Constitution by the defense. You are to

1 determine solely whether the defendant is of Japanese 2 ancestry. If he is, you are to determine whether he 3 had registered and left for camp, as instructed. If 4 he had failed to comply with any of these orders, you 5 are to return a verdict of guilty."

6 That, in the final analysis, was my trial.
7 Loyalty had nothing to do with my conviction. From the 8 time I originally made the decision to violate the 9 exclusion order, I had maintained the faith that when 10 my case finally got to the Supreme Court, I would have 11 my day in court. I fully expected that as a citizen, 12 the Constitution would protect me.

13 Even though I lost, I did not abandon my 14 belief in the Constitution. Accordingly, when the 15 discovery of government misconduct gave me an opportunity 16 to petition for a writ of error coram nobis, I did not 17 hesitate for a moment.

18 After filing the petition, I received an 19 anonymous letter signed "A Japanese friend, and I hope 20 it will always be thus," dated October 28th, 1982. I 21 believe this writer meant a friend of the Japanese, and 22 I hope it will always be thus. With your permission, 23 I would like to quote an excerpt from that letter 24 which opens as follows:

25 "Dear Mr. Hirabayashi:

1 "Have you ever attempted to estimate the 2 enormous hatred of the Japanese after the heinous
3 attack on Pearl Harbor?"

4 The letter goes on.

5 "Maybe our government did irrational things.
6 So did your people when they attacked the Islands. That 7 certainly was uncalled for. This was war and during 8 such a confrontation one can expect bizarre solutions 9 to problems. Have you forgotten how the U.S. Government 10 helped Japan to reestablish itself as a world power?
11 And what the American people gave wasn't peanuts, 12 either. Can't you find anything to be grateful for, 13 or is your ambition cloistered in a desire to get even 14 no matter what the consequences? If you can't bury 15 your hatchet, then perhaps our government was too 16 lenient. Perhaps there should have been five or ten 17 nuclear bombs dropped on your people and then for-18 gotten."

19 Your Honor, I believe it is relevant to 20 note that this is a letter written not forty years ago
21 during the war, but in the 1980's. I also wish to note 22 that this writer throughout his letter regards me not 23 as an American citizen but as an Imperial Japanese 24 subject, just as during the war my government were 25 satisfied to label me as "Non-alien" rather than

1 "citizen."

2 If the unimaginable had happened to citizens
3 during World War II, can it happen again to another
4 minority group? Just recently Vincent Chin in Detroit 5 was beaten to death with a baseball bat by two 6 unemployed auto workers. They had thought he was 7 Japanese. Like the Government during World War II, 8 they singled him out because of his ancestry.

9 During the hostage crisis a few years ago,
10 many Americans, including some high ranking Government 11 representatives, talked about interning persons of 12 Iranian ancestry. My case stands for the precedent 13 that it can happen again. This is not only my case.
14 This is not only a Japanese-American case. This is an 15 American case.

16 Since the answer to the question "Can it 17 happen again?" is yes, it is vitally important during 18 relative periods of calm to insure that "bizarre 19 solutions" have less opportunity to occur again.

20 In conclusion, I wish to ask the Government 21 why it continues to this day to defend violations of 22 our constitution and not acknowledge my petition in 23 the interests of justice.

25 THE COURT: Thank you.

1 Mr. Stone, would you care, or Ms. Barnes,
2 would you care to make a response?

3 MR. STONE: I can either respond if Your 4 Honor would like in some detail to a lot of the things
5 that were said or I can just make very brief response.

6 THE COURT: Let me tell you what it is 7 really my intention to do after hearing the arguments 8 and studying the briefs is to deny the Government's 9 motion to dismiss and set down an evidentiary hearing, 10 in effect, a trial on the coram nobis, so would you 11 want to address that tentative decision?

12 MR. STONE: Yes, Your Honor, and I'd like 13 to explain what I think is foremost. Perhaps I should 14 just start from that point.

15 I think that the problem with setting this 16 for hearing is really threefold. The narrowest ground 17 that I think the Court has to consider is if it were 18 to set a hearing, has there been a legal basis, that 19 is, a sufficient offer of proof for a hearing.

20 As a legal matter, pure and simple, have 21 there been sufficient newly discovered allegations which 22 justify what is a rather substantial burden and 23 departure from what has been done in the other similar 24 cases of this matter? In fact, we think that if the 25 Court reviews those documents, you will see that there

1 is no document among them that was not available which 2 went to the substantive proof of what went on before 3 1950.

4 To bring such a hearing now in 1984, thirty-5 four years after it could have been brought, when many 6 of those people are dead and gone and many of those 7 records are lost is something that is just simply 8 contrary to the precedent that has been established 9 and which binds this Court. As you can imagine, it 10 puts the Government at quite a disadvantage.

11 Why wasn't it brought before? That's some-12 thing we will postpone for a moment. Let's look at 13 the second consideration. Do any of those allegations 14 warrant a hearing because they would result in a 15 different result if the case were tried again? The 16 Ringle Report which suggested that he conceded that 17 approximately three out of a hundred people might be 18 suspect. The time when the House and Senate of the 19 United States passed the law which was violated here, 20 they said they conceded no more than ten out of a 21 hundred people were suspect. They conceded that 90 22 per cent of the people would be unfortunately moved 23 without just cause.

24 The General's position would have to be, if 25 I were a General, I need only hear you tell me that

1 one out of a hundred is a potential problem. If I
2 don't have time to go through 110,000, I have a 3 rational basis on which to act.

4 Now, in retrospect, we may say "General, 5 you've got to have at least ten out of a hundred, or 6 at least ten out of a hundred and some basis to 7 believe that," but if he is getting information that 8 even says three out of a hundred, where he has been 9 clearly, as many of the historical treatises made 10 clear, where he has been told the people on the island 11 of Hawaii did not do their job. Our best ships, our 12 most ready reserves, were devastated and a country on 13 that front was exposed. You may not make that mistake.
14 Now, the man need only have a rational basis, and the 15 law which bound the Supreme Court then and binds this 16 Court has never been reversed is that a General's 17 decision in a war zone is not controlled by hindsight.

18 So we would have to go back now and litigate 19 what he knew in 1942 and what was available to him.

20 THE COURT: Didn't he, for one thing, know
21 that there was no demonstrable sabotage or espionage 22 in Hawaii leading up to the --

23 MR. STONE: No. As a matter of fact, Your 24 Honor, I think we're getting very far afield, but the 25 state of knowledge in '43 or '44, when Mr. Ennis

1 prepared briefs in the Supreme Court, is not what was 2 in General DeWitt's hands in 1942. He had varying 3 estimates. He had people like Lieutenant Commander
4 Ringle who I pointed out was not from the Headquarters
5 Unit of ONI telling him that they thought any mass
6 evacuation would be an overreaction. And he had other 7 intelligence which suggested that there might well be 8 a raid on the airplane factories that he was charged 9 to defend at all costs.

10 Now, how he chose to react is his state of 11 mind in 1942; not in 1943; not in 1944. Now, you're 12 asking to go back and open up issues --

13 THE COURT: Doesn't he have to take into 14 consideration, though, those facts which were made 15 known to him, that is, as to whether there was 16 sabotage or Fifth Column activity on Hawaii by 17 American citizens, or J. Edgar Hoover's letter where 18 he said - I think he said - "We know the people who 19 should be picked up. We know their identity."

20 MR. STONE: The public record will show, 21 Your Honor, and the public record does show that he 22 did not act without the best available information 23 being made available to him, whether or not it was 24 accurate, whether or not it was sufficient by our 25 standards.

1 Assuming for the moment that it was only
2 Mr. Ringle's report, it told him that three and a half 3 per cent of the population was something he had to 4 worry about. Now, whether someone could tell him "But 5 don't worry; we know who those three and a half per 6 cent of the population are," that is something he 7 didn't have to take anybody else's word for. And if 8 he was concerned that he would be exposing the United 9 States at a time that they were losing World War II 10 to a problem, that is a decision we have to look at 11 through his eyes.

12 Now, all of the documents which question
13 his judgment in that regard were available before 1950, 14 because that question, that judgment was questioned
15 in the Supreme Court. It was questioned in the briefs 16 in Mr. Hirabayashi's case. It was questioned in 17 Eugene Rothchild's argument in 1945. It was questioned
18 by the War Relocation Authority itself when it pub-19 lished those materials in 1946. It was investigated.
20 The Department's files were turned over, and it was 21 written about by Morton Grodson in his seminal work 22 "American Betrayed" in 1949, when he said then that he 23 thought the Supreme Court ought to reconsider the case.

24 Then General DeWitt was still alive. I
25 could find out what he was relying on, perhaps, and all

1 the other people that he dealt with were still around, 2 and some of his files might have been intact. That was 3 not done for nearly thirty-five years, and there is no 4 document before this Court the substance of which was 5 not available then.

6 Sure, Mr. Ennis had some of the same 7 feelings in 1944 and 1945 that Mr. Grotzens had in 8 1949, and Mr. Ennis in 1946 left the Government, became 9 the General Counsel of the ACLU, and for thirty years 10 functioned as the General Counsel of the ACLU. He was 11 one of the people instrumental in getting the Japanese-12 American Claims Act passed. But if he felt that there 13 were some kind of Government misconduct which infected 14 the whole case, his clients were the Japanese-American 15 Citizens League at that point. How come he didn't 16 bring it to their attention?

17 We submit that the Supreme Court made it 18 very clear, and indeed, I think what you just heard 19 about the instructions that the judge gave the jury 20 made it very clear that it was impossible, and I think 21 ultimately that's what we'd be trying to prove here, 22 whether it would have been impossible for a General
23 to conclude that he had any rational basis to do it.
24 That was a determination which nobody wanted to take up 25 at that time.

1 As a result, they took up the question
2 whether it was lawful, and the Supreme Court made a
3 ruling in light of the times and the War Powers clause
4 which was invoked then, that much as it disliked 5 General DeWitt's decision, and it said so, and the 6 Government said it was not thrilled with his decision, 7 that the rule of law was that a court in hindsight
8 only may determine whether there is any rational basis
9 for a judge, and in fact, I submit that the Ringle
10 Report is itself a rational basis. It doesn't say 11 that there is nothing to worry about. It tells the 12 General to conduct individual hearings instead of mass
13 hearings.

14 Now, whether or not he had to conduct mass
15 hearings or individual hearings shows the Court, I 16 think, prima facie, how difficult this question has to 17 be forty years down the line. Just to give you some 18 background on just how complex this is --

19 THE COURT: You don't need to tell me that.

20 MR. STONE: Well, you asked what happened
21 in Hawaii. The documents will -- I can tell you what 22 happened in Hawaii. The General there pleaded with 23 the Central Staff in Washington that he needed every 24 available man to rebuild that place, and since it had 25 been bombed, he didn't care if he had people who were

1 known to be Japanese Nationals and paid spies. He 2 needed the labor to rebuild that place, and ultimately 3 there were several boatloads of people who were sent 4 off the island. He said he could neither afford the 5 boat transportation to take them off, because he 6 needed supplies, and he couldn't afford to lose the 7 labor which was thirty-five per cent of the work force 8 that was needed to rebuilt. He said the strategic 9 value of the place was already shot.

10 Most of that is in the Commission's Report.
11 In terms of German and Italian-Americans, the curfew 12 order which was established here, and which is one of 13 the two misdemeanor violations, did absolutely include 14 Italian and German aliens in this war zone.

15 THE COURT: American citizens?

16 MR. STONE: It didn't include American 17 citizens.

18 THE COURT: It did not.

19 MR. STONE: It included Italian and German 20 aliens, and in fact, there were many cases where 21 spouses of American soldiers were out with their 22 husbands after the curfew and there were cases
23 referred to the Department of Justice for prosecution 24 and the Department had to wrestle with what it was 25 going to do.

1 Now, were they ordered evacuated from the 2 zone? No. Was there a likelihood that their mother 3 countries would invade this coast? No. But during 4 World War I Germans were ordered evacuated from the 5 District of Columbia, and there were many individual 6 hearings and many individuals were sent to individual 7 internment camps from which they were unable, like 8 these internment camps, to sign various papers and be 9 paroled out of them, like the 30,000 people who were 10 paroled out of the camps. Those were different kinds 11 of hearings and they led to much different results.

12 Now, the fact that there is no newly dis-13 covered critical document before the Court is one of 14 the things that we're trying to deal with in our 15 documents. Another is the fact that while it may be 16 that the timeliness of the Congressional response, 17 the Commission's hearings, has reawakened certain 18 public awareness and has made this more timely, and 19 I understand perfectly that it leads people to want now 20 a legal response. That's not the way the law works.

21 One cannot simply have the documents at 22 their command, and I take strong exception to the 23 affidavit, by the way, in the record filed by Mr.
24 Irons that because he waited until 1981 to prepare for 25 those hearings and filed a Freedom of Information Act

1 request and get his response without taking any 2 Freedom of Information Act appeals or anything like that,
3 that somehow the documents were not available since 4 1968 when the Freedom of Information Act was passed.

5 I understand the timeliness of it but that 6 does not make it legally available for the first time 7 when it's almost impossible to put the pieces of the 8 puzzle back together again, and when they were well 9 known for a long time.

10 THE COURT: Let me ask you, and I really 11 have made up my mind on this, it seems to me that this 12 is something the Court has to make a finding on. You 13 may be absolutely right, but I don't think that I can 14 make that finding on the basis of the exhibits that 15 have been introduced here. I think if the Petitioner 16 sets forth a number of exhibits which he feels are 17 essential to a denial of due process to him, then you 18 would have the opportunity to show when those documents 19 first became available, and I would take that into 20 consideration.

21 MR. STONE: Well, fine, Your Honor. That's 22 fine. If you want to order them to supplement by 23 identifying which documents --

24 THE COURT: No, I mean on an evidentiary
25 hearing.

1 MR. STONE: Well, I note for Your Honor's --
2 and I will point you again to page 14 of their last 3 response where they concede that there is no new 4 document other than the Government counsel's problems
5 arguing the case three years after the General decided 6 the case, the General decided what he was going to do.

7 Now, that is not something that goes to the 8 difference in the result with respect to whether his 9 action was authorized. That goes to the second ques-
10 tion. That goes to whether in fact, even assuming 11 there was a newly discovered document of some kind, 12 whether this would change the result. We have provided 13 you with briefs frankly we think they should have pro-14 vided you with, the original Supreme Court briefs, and 15 you will see by looking at those briefs there were the 16 same identical issues to argue then. The Harper's 17 magazine article was argued at length. The people 18 argued about the authorship, but they kept insisting 19 that it was intelligence people responsible and the 20 Government did not deny it, because it says on its 21 face the government intelligence officer. In fact,
22 the Government cited it as well. I mean, whether you 23 want to argue how they cited it --

24 THE COURT: Let me ask you this, and let me
25 do state this to you and the petitioner and everyone.

1 My mind is really open on this case. I have not 2 decided this case one way or another. I think the 3 whole nation, at least knowledgeable people, now 4 concede that a great wrong was done, but in this par-
5 ticular case I have to make certain findings.

6 Now, you say the Harper's article was argued 7 to the Supreme Court. If the Government knew that that 8 article was written by the same intelligence officer 9 who authored the January 1942 letter, should it not 10 have said to the Supreme Court, "Don't argue the 11 Harper's magazine article which means nothing, an 12 anonymous article, but on the other hand, say to the 13 Supreme Court, "We feel that you should know that the 14 Office of Naval Intelligence did not agree with 15 DeWitt."

16 MR. STONE: That article does not say that, 17 Your Honor, and there is not one shred of proof before 18 you --

19 THE COURT: Which article did not?

20 MR. STONE: The Harper's article does not 21 say --

22 THE COURT: Forget about the Harper's
23 article. Didn't the Government have a duty to say to 24 the Supreme Court, "The Office of Naval Intelligence, 25 responsible for intelligence in this area, particularly

1 with people of Japanese extraction, disagrees and does 2 not feel there is a military necessity?"

3 MR. STONE: You are assuming a conclusion,
4 Your Honor. That's what we would have a hearing over.
5 In fact, they did not say that because it was probably 6 1977 before most of the documents relevant to their 7 determination were declassified by the National 8 Security Agency.

9 The Government is not prepared to say and 10 was not prepared to say then that it could make a full 11 record because the documentation was declassified, or 12 that that article encompassed all of the considerations, 13 but even if it had, keep in mind that article does not 14 say there is no threat. It says the threat, instead of 15 what Congress pegged it at, at 10 per cent, at ten 16 out of a hundred people, is only three and a half per 17 cent. It did not say no threat. That's why the 18 Government --

19 THE COURT: If I said "no threat," I didn't 20 mean to say that because the article in his letter does 21 say -- I think he said -- that in my opinion, all of 22 those Japanese-Americans who studied in Japan should 23 be picked up, maybe the members of certain militaristic 24 organizations should be picked up.

25 MR. STONE: Sure. Maybe members of their

1 families and such, and he recommended strongly in favor 2 of individual hearings.

3 The Supreme Court had that issue briefed,
4 whether individual hearings were required, at great 5 length, and discusses it, and ultimately said that 6 question, individual versus group hearings was a judg-
7 ment call by the General.

8 You're right, Your Honor. That was the 9 issue, and that was the one they decided was the 10 General's call during wartime in a war zone, and if you
11 don't like his call, the responsible reply is you move 12 them out of there. And that's exactly what they did.
13 By the time the report was published in January 1944,
14 he was no longer in charge of the Western Defense 15 Command. He had been a four-star general before. He 16 had been in the Philippines and the war was still going 17 on and he was reduced to a position at the Army War 18 College in Washington behind a desk, which he always 19 said in later years he felt was punishment by General 20 Marshall.

21 THE COURT: Is that DeWitt?

22 MR. STONE: That was General DeWitt. But 23 the point is, that was the way the Supreme Court 24 decided the case. They had it in front of them and 25 they made that call, and the military as well expressed its displeasure.

Digressing for one moment about this business of the Final Report, I'd like to answer your question "How did one volume survive?" That one volume has always been in the National Archives. Not only is that one volume there, but all correspondence about destroying other volumes and indeed, lots of correspondence about lots of changes, first volume to second volume, and how they were written are all there, as well as an explanation that General DeWitt went ahead and had it put in galleys before he really had permission to do so, and apparently he was pretty embarrassed by that, and to the extent that he destroyed copies, he had printed up copies when he really didn't have any authority and perhaps as a General who turns square corners, he recognized that the printing of it was an embarrassment to him. But he did not destroy the copy which has sat in the National Archives, available and declassified.

THE COURT: Declassified when?

MR. STONE: Since 1956 it has been available.

THE COURT: Let me say this to you, because I don't want to get into a heated argument with you because it looks as if I've made up my mind --

MR. STONE: I'll go on to another point, if

1 I may. The point that I wanted to make was that we 2 have listed in that last reply three separate jurisdic-
3 tional legal hurdles before the Court convenes a 4 hearing which we feel they haven't met, and we hope you 5 will scrutinize those with care.

6 THE COURT: All right.

7 MR. STONE: Beyond that, let me go back --

8 THE COURT: Let me say this, if you will.

9 MR. STONE: Sure.

10 THE COURT: I don't think it's up to the 11 Court to make a finding that they have established 12 these various things in order to have a hearing. It 13 seems to me that they have made a prima facie showing 14 that they may be able to establish certain things and 15 therefore I should have a hearing.

16 MR. STONE: That's why we filed that brief,
17 Your Honor, to show them that they have not made a 18 prima facie showing, to show that the published docu-
19 ments show there is nothing newly discovered, to show 20 that all of their allegations would not have changed 21 the result, and to show that there is no stigma that 22 the law can redress.

23 Yes, the Executive and perhaps the Legis-
24 lature, and they have taken steps, but there is no 25 legal consequence the law can redress. That's

1 precisely why we filed that, to rebut their claim that 2 they are at the threshold of a hearing. And we add to 3 that the fact that the Court has in front of it a 4 motion by the Government which is now being presumably 5 ordered to go all through all that material to have a 6 hearing where the Government says this is an exercise
7 that is not appropriate for the Judicial Branch.

8 I have heard several times today the state-9 ment that even though the Executive and Legislative 10 Branches have moved ahead and done good things, the 11 Judicial Branch must do them. As Your Honor well knows, 12 the Judicial Branch is not in the same active role as 13 the Executive and the Legislative. The Executive can 14 issue presidential proclamations. The Legislature can 15 pass the bill. In fact, it has created a committee 16 that has done a lot of things. But Your Honor must 17 wait for a live case or controversy. Your Honor, the 18 Judiciary generally is not out front redressing many 19 wrongs until a real case is brought before it.

20 This is no real case because --

21 THE COURT: Why do you say that?

22 MR. STONE: Because we move under Rule 48(a) 23 to dismiss it. That's why it's no real case. There is 24 nothing left if we, as you pointed out before, in an 25 indictment, an individual can't carry a gun under the

1 law while he's indicted. There is a statute against 2 it. There are a lot of problems with an indictment,
3 even before trial. The Government moves to dismiss.
4 It has explained a rational basis to Your Honor, and 5 in that Weber case the Government couldn't even say 6 there was anything wrong with the proof of the prose-
7 cution. That is sufficient.

8 Here we have helped you, Your Honor, and 9 pointed out that the Executive and the Legislative 10 Branch have obviated this kind of a very complicated 11 hearing. I almost felt that many of the papers make 12 it appear that it's going to be a witch hunt to find 13 out who was the evil person who supplied the material 14 to General DeWitt. I frankly think he probably had a 15 mountain of security information presented to him and 16 I don't know how much of that mountain is left today.
17 Maybe a holehill. But before Your Honor does that, 18 we have concluded that that kind of a proceeding would 19 not be productive and so we have exercised the 20 Executive Branch prerogative which does indeed moot 21 this by moving to dismiss.

22 Your Honor is in the same position you will 23 be if you grant the hearings and then we made that 24 motion, and it has all the same authority going for it, 25 frankly, and if Your Honor makes that motion, grants

1 it, we will feel just as confident defending it as we 2 may unfortunately, having to take it up ahead of time,
3 because the Government does not feel it is appropriate,
4 does not feel that the judiciary plays the same role 5 as Congress which can hold hearings on the various 6 bills, has a roving commission which has heard, as 7 Judge Patel points out, something like over seven 8 hundred witnesses and sat in more than a dozen cities.
9 That is Congress' role. They spent a million dollars 10 having that commission.

11 That is not the role of this Court, and 12 Your Honor I know knows that. It would be one thing 13 if I stood here and told you, Your Honor, that we do 14 wish to prosecute the case again; that we think every 15 case of civil disobedience during wartime has to be 16 defended to the teeth or we can't ever fight a war; 17 that because General DeWitt may have had one piece of 18 information in front of him which justified it and 19 his right, we've got to protect his memory today and 20 therefore we're not going to move to dismiss.

21 But we're not saying that, Your Honor. We 22 are conceding. We have long conceded. President Ford 23 did it in a public proclamation at the request of these 24 same groups, that it was a mistaken era. In that 25 light, we don't feel it appropriate or even that this

1 is the forum, with evidentiary objections and the kind
2 of restrictions on cross-examination that one re-
3 examines those questions simply because the Judiciary 4 has never spoken before.

5 The Judiciary doesn't speak that way. That's 6 not the way the Judiciary speaks. The Judiciary speaks 7 when there is a live case in front of it, and we think 8 it is ample proof that there has never been a loyalty 9 question as to Mr. Hirabayashi. That was clear when 10 President Truman pardoned him or he never would have 11 been pardoned from the Selective Service violation.

12 No one has even impugned Mr. Haribayashi's 13 loyalty. The worst people involved didn't appear in 14 90 -- the loyalty of ninety out of a hundred, and they 15 just said we don't know how to decide what to do with 16 the other miscellaneous percentage. We're arguing here 17 over what the size of that percentage was and how they 18 should have dealt with it. Well, that was argued in 19 the Supreme Court. We don't wish to relitigate that, 20 frankly. We think it would be inappropriate where the 21 Executive Branch has decided. It is happy today that 22 President Ford did, and it hopes we won't treat groups 23 as a whole in the future; that they will all get 24 hearings.

25 It cannot happen again. The statute has

1 been repealed by Congress, express congressional 2 action, almost ten years ago. The Executive order 3 terminated at the end of World War II and the 4 Executive said it won't do it again, and beyond that 5 it couldn't do it because a different statute was 6 passed in 1970 that said it is no longer within the 7 Executive prerogative to do such a thing. That's 8 18 USC 4001(a).

9 The point is the circumstances are very 10 much changed. I believe that everyone has learned 11 from the lesson of that tragedy, as President Ford 12 said, without needing to reopen those same wounds here 13 to determine what was the particular problem that 14 caused a poor judgment to be made at a time when some 15 military people might have been more sensible.

16 It is because of that, because we don't 17 feel that wound needs to be reopened, and we think 18 it's a deep wound if we open it, that we have made a 19 motion which we ask the Court to grant and that motion 20 of itself causes the Court, in addition to providing 21 a vehicle for a resolution of this case, it also pro-
22 vides the Court with additional obstacles that we do 23 not believe that leaves any case in controversy and 24 that the judicial role is satisfied by moving to 25 vacate and dismiss, just as was done by Judge Baloney

1 in Oregon, Judge Patel in San Francisco, and Judge
2 Oberdorfer in Washington, D.C., who was forced to say 3 in the context of a huge civil case, "I'm sorry, but 4 that is Congress' role now." That is what he has 5 reluctantly in these 59 pages, I understand, concluded.

6 That is the congressional role. They have 7 bills in front of them. They have constitution com-
8 mittees, and we don't think there is any question, 9 frankly, of any moral stigma left here. If there was,
10 and we doubt it, we have never seen -- I don't think 11 there is a law professor in this country, although they 12 say the case law may be a stain on the judicial fabric.
13 Everyone has always recognized that plaintiffs wore a 14 badge of honor for being civil disobedience to test 15 that case law. No one has ever suggested that they 16 wore any badge of shame, and we still would contest 17 that.

18 They never have, and if that weren't clear,
19 we certainly hope the President of the United States,
20 and Congress through their Commission's recommendation, 21 and that I here today make that one thing very clear.
22 We just urge the Court to be very circumspect before 23 what we think is unnecessarily reopening a very large 24 Pandora's Box.

25 Thank you, Your Honor.

1 THE COURT: Well, before I proceed further
2 here, I thought maybe Mr. Hirabayashi was going to say 3 some things that I picked up in the transcript of the 4 trial that I think I will just put into the record 5 because they would not otherwise be known, and that 6 was that his father came to the United States in 1909 7 and his mother in 1914, and they never returned to 8 Japan from that time;

9 That Mr. Hirabayashi was born in Seattle in 10 1918, educated in the public schools here. He was a 11 senior at the University of Washignton in 1942 when 12 these events occurred. He had never been to Japan and 13 never had any communication with the Japanese govern-14 ment; never corresponded with any Japanese living in 15 Japan.

16 He had been active in Boy Scouts, had been 17 an Assistant Scoutmaster. He was active in and vice-18 president of the YMCA at the University. He had 19 represented the YMCA at conferences in other states, 20 and had never been arrested.

21 So that here was a young man, I guess twenty-22 four years of age. It was, of course, an extreme, 23 understandably, I believe, an extreme blow to him and 24 we can only admire his courage for standing up for his 25 rights.

1 I believe that there are really ample 2 consequences to that conviction, even though many of 3 them are gone. There nevertheless is the stigma of 4 being someone who, in the eyes of the law, disobeyed 5 a lawful statute and a lawful regulation of the United 6 States. And as I believe he said, or as counsel said, 7 what he really is seeking now is vindication of his 8 honor, and I feel that he has that right.

9 I don't want to open a Pandora's Box and it 10 may be that it would be opened, but I think there are 11 collateral consequences and that he has in the eyes of 12 some people, and perhaps many people, lived under this 13 cloud of having disobeyed a lawful statute of the 14 United States. I think it is no longer a stigma in the 15 eyes of knowledgeable persons.

16 So I am going to deny the Government's 17 motion to dismiss, and maybe at a later time the 18 Government can come in with that motion and I will have 19 to grant it. I just don't know, but I think at the 20 present time under Rule 48, that where the petitioner
21 objects to the dismissal by the Government, that I 22 cannot grant that motion.

23 I am going to set down a hearing on the 24 petition for the writ of coram nobis. I think it is 25 a remedy. It's the only remedy that the Court has that

1 it may be called upon to exercise.

2 But let me say this to all of you, Counsel, 3 particularly counsel for petitioner, and the people in 4 this courtroom. Even though I recognize - a lot of 5 us do and the Government does - what a monumental 6 error was made, but that doesn't decide this particular 7 case, and the various exhibits and briefs that were 8 submitted to me, not deliberately, but this case and 9 the Yasui and the Korematsu case were so mixed up 10 it's hard for me now to decide what issues were tried 11 by Judge Black in this court.

12 I don't think the issue of military 13 necessity was raised in the trial court; it was all 14 a constitutional question. It wasn't heard in the 15 Court of Appeals because the issue was certified to 16 the Supreme Court right away over the dissent of Judge
17 Demler. And then in the Supreme Court, I don't know 18 how much the issue of military necessity was presented 19 by the briefs to the Supreme Court or what was cited 20 to them.

21 So those will be things that will be before 22 me, and I might well, in light of the issues framed in 23 the trial court and the Supreme Court, even though there
24 were a lot of things going on elsewhere about the ONI
25 Report and the FBI Report and the change in the Final

1 Report of General DeWitt, even though those things 2 were occurring, it is conceivable that they may not 3 have had an effect on this case, and that of course is 4 what I have to look at.

5 Now, what I must do is to set down a 6 hearing date or a trial date on those things and there 7 is no use keeping everybody else here while we go over 8 those things. Thank you all for the fine arguments 9 that were made to me.

10 I would like to see counsel and the 11 petitioner, if you would care to be there, in my con-12 ference room and then we will look at an evidentiary 13 hearing date and so forth.

14 (End of proceedings.)

15 (The following proceedings 16 occurred in the chambers of the Court:)

17 THE COURT: Let me tell all of you, I
18 thought those were excellent arguments. It is of 19 course a very interesting case. I think that, and 20 maybe the petitioner and his counsel have thought or 21 will give this serious consideration, the thought of 22 accepting the Government's offer, because it is not an 23 open and shut case at all on this particular thing.
24 It might go to a final hearing and the writ of coram 25 nobis be denied, but that is your decision. But I think

1 you ought to give it good hard serious thought.

2 MR. HALL: Your Honor, I will say this.
3 There have been discussions between us and the Govern-
4 ment.

5 THE COURT: What?

6 MR. HALL: There have been discussions
7 between us and the Government, and I think that maybe 8 the discussion can continue.

9 THE COURT: Because as the Government's 10 brief indicated to me, certainly the attitude of the 11 Government since maybe 1950 or even shortly after the 12 war has changed considerably, so it is not a case of 13 a hostile antagonistic government trying to hand onto 14 the victory that it won.

15 I, of course, have seen really only one side 16 of this story at the present time. What I was think-17 ing about doing - and I have talked to Elva here who 18 has the job of trying to find time to do these things - 19 would be to set down a time, and I want to do it now.
20 I will talk to you about an appropriate time, a Friday 21 afternoon sometime in the future, and we may not be 22 able to finish it in one Friday afternoon, may have to 23 continue it from Friday afternoon to Friday afternoon, 24 but my trial days, midweek days, are just jammed.

25 Now, Mr. Hirabayashi, you are in Canada now,

1 teaching in Canada?

2 THE PETITIONER: Well, I am retired now.

3 THE COURT: You're much too young to be 4 retired. Isn't that right, Mr. Barnett? I say he is 5 much too young to be retired.

6 MR. BARNETT: Oh, yes.

7 THE PETITIONER: This year I am just tired.

8 THE COURT: I see. Let me just tell you a 9 little story I thought of a few moments ago. I read
10 a story some time ago about after the Civil War 11 General Pickett was taken to Robert E. Lee's home with 12 another Confederate general. It was a pretty icy sort 13 of a conference because Pickett really had resented 14 what happened to him at Gettysburgh. They came out 15 after the meeting and Pickett said to this other 16 General, "That old man just destroyed my regiment," 17 and the other man said, "He made you immortal."

18 With you it's something you don't want to 19 go through, but it has certainly made you almost 20 immortal in the legal records.

21 Well, let's look at the time. How long is 22 it going to take the Government, because I think 23 probably the petitioner has all the exhibits that 24 they're thinking they're going to rely upon, how long 25 do you think it would take the Government to be

1 prepared?

2 MR. STONE: I would like to ask a number
3 of questions first, if I may?

4 THE COURT: Very well.

5 MR. STONE: The first question, I gather 6 from what you just said, and reinforcing what you said, 7 you have not yet really completed going through our 8 41-page brief in some detail.

9 THE COURT: Well, I have. You know, these 10 papers just rained down on my like a snowball, but I 11 have gone through your brief carefully enough to know 12 that I think that I should have a hearing here. That, 13 as I said out there, doesn't at all indicate that I am 14 going to grant the writ and set aside the conviction 15 on the basis there has been a deprivation of due process, 16 but it seems to me the petitioner has made enough of a 17 showing that I should have an evidentiary hearing.

18 MR. STONE: That takes me to my next 19 question. Is it an evidentiary hearing where you are 20 asking them to now identify what is newly discovered?

21 THE COURT: I would think it would be more 22 what they rely upon to establish that there was a 23 deprivation of due process.

24 MR. STONE: And newly discovered?

25 THE COURT: No. I would think there that

1 since you are the one who is arguing that much of it,
2 if not all of it, was long ago known, and it is really 3 a defense. It is a laches defense which can be a good 4 defense, that the burden there would be for you to 5 show when those particular records were available to 6 the public.

7 MR. STONE: Will you expect witnesses as 8 well at this hearing?

9 THE COURT: I think it probably is pretty 10 much up to counsel. I had thought that it probably 11 could be decided on the documents, but it may not be.

12 MR. STONE: There is no way it could be 13 decided on the documents. Ed Ennis is still alive; 14 John J. McCloy is still alive. They are in their 15 eighties. I don't know how well they travel, that is 16 another question. I don't know how fragile they are.
17 I don't know whether they will want subpoenas.

18 MR. HALL: We will probably wish to take 19 their deposition. That may solve the problem.

20 MR. STONE: I guess what I would request,
21 Your Honor, there are two things I have in mind. One 22 is I would just like to alert you that I may be 23 requested by the Department to ask you whether you 24 would commit to a written opinion your views today.
25 As I tried to indicate out there, this would be, I

1 think the Attorney General would feel this would be 2 possibly a substantial burden on his right to move 3 under Rule 48(a) and he might wish, in light of that, 4 to do something about it.

5 I would also ask you whether you would be 6 willing to certify this as an interlocutory appeal
7 question. I don't know whether this is of the type 8 that requires it, but irrespective, if you certify it 9 we have no problem. It would be a substantial 10 imposition to go to such a hearing and we think it 11 would probably have more harmful effects. It is a 12 hearing which I loathe.

13 THE COURT: I don't have any hesitation at 14 all in putting my thoughts into a memorandum decision 15 on these motions. I probably did not, just because of 16 the lack of time, I probably didn't elaborate on my 17 ideas, but I think I did say that I would deny your 18 motion because I just doubt that I have the power at 19 this time to grant that motion at this posture of the 20 case.

21 Then I would probably indicate that I feel 22 the petitioner has established a prima facie case and 23 therefore should have a hearing to see whether he can 24 establish the grounds for setting aside the conviction.
25 Would that be enough for your purposes?

MR. STONE: Whatever Your Honor would want to do.

THE COURT: Then let the transcript say whether it says.

MR. STONE: If you would indicate underneath you will certify for an interlocutory appeal, that would be tremendously helpful. I don't know whether we would want to take it up, but it would at least make it available for the Attorney General and he could then decide.

THE COURT: Why don't you do this. I am just thinking about the sequence in which it should be handled. Maybe I should get a memorandum decision out and then you ask for an interlocutory appeal --

MR. STONE: Okay.

THE COURT: -- or certify it for an interlocutory appeal.

MR. HALL: May I suggest that even while this is proceeding, it probably would not be inappropriate to take some preservation depositions.

MR. STONE: I disagree, Your Honor. We have waited forty-three years.

MR. HALL: The only problem is, then I think the record should indicate we are suggesting to the Government to accomodate us in taking some

1 preservation depositions, and if the issue is appealed 2 and the Government's appeal is reversed and it is sent 3 back for hearing or put back in status quo, we feel 4 that the Government should not then be heard to argue
5 that X, Y and Z, who were alive in May, 1984, are no 6 longer with us.

7 THE COURT: I think that I would, if the 8 Government takes it up, would deny the privilege to 9 take preservation depositions, to preserve testimony.

10 MR. STONE: Assuming for a moment that we 11 don't take it up, Your Honor, I would ask that you 12 utilize the procedure, which again we are in somewhat 13 of a Never-Never-Land, this is a post-conviction 14 criminal proceeding. It is not a civil proceeding and 15 it is an unusual --

16 THE COURT: It certainly is.

17 MR. STONE: I don't think the Supreme Court 18 left much room for it, but be that as it may, we would 19 still like to see you require some kind of a pre-20 hearing order so that all sides would know for the 21 purpose of that hearing with you, what it was we 22 expected they were going to produce, as well as their 23 critical documents, in case there were some of them we 24 wanted to agree as to certain aspects of those docu-25 ments.

THE COURT: I would propose to get to that at the present time.

MR. STONE: In terms of that, I would think any aspect of this case would take us several months to prepare, any aspect.

THE COURT: I would think so, too. I was really thinking about sometime next fall, probably.

MR. STONE: Uh-hmm.

THE COURT: Because the petitioner here and his counsel obviously have been working a long time on this. It couldn't have been done as thoroughly and as well as it was without a lot of time being devoted to it.

Well, why don't we first look at the first Friday that I could do it, maybe after the first of October, because I know I've got a whole bunch of cases before that.

THE CLERK: Also we have that seminar you're going to have to go to in October.

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. HALL: I think I have a case to try with you in October.

THE COURT: Do you? Which one is that?

MR. HALL: The one you told me to settle.

one.

MR. HALL: I think I got a notice from you yesterday about a settlement conference.

THE CLERK: A 39.1 is what it was.

THE COURT: Well, why don't we -- let's set it down on the 19th and then if I have to change it, I've got to change it. I know that I've got to go back to Washington, D.C. one weekend in October.

MR. HALL: At the beginning of the hearing -- at 1:30 on the 19th of October?

THE COURT: Yes.

MR. HALL: May I -- I know it's difficult, but I am in a case that has about a hundred million pages of documents and maybe a thousand depositions. Depositions start on the 10th of September, and so I need as much advance notice as possible on changes. I can work on the 19th with you, but if it is going to be changed, then I would probably need quite a bit of time after that.

THE COURT: Let me ask all of you about the urgency of time. This matter has been up in the air for forty-two years. We could probably, although I don't know even in 1985 whether I could carve out time that hasn't been filled. Would you rather have successive Friday afternoons? I think I can give you at an earlier

1 date or a later date, I could try to actually give you 2 a few days.

3 MR. STONE: It is a tremendous inconvenience
4 for me to come in from Washington and I think I probably 5 would prefer a later date where you can give us a block
6 of time. I think it would also be easier for Your Honor 7 to follow the relevance of something and not have to 8 get into it and postpone it for a week and then have 9 to get back into it each time.

10 MR. HALL: I think we would like an early 11 date, obviously, but I recognize the problem. If we 12 don't have an appeal, presumably the biggest problem is 13 the preservation of testimony.

14 THE CLERK: I think we have a better chance 15 of getting it in in November. How many days would this 16 be? If you did it in a day -- how long would it take?

17 THE COURT: Any idea of the amount of time?

18 MR. STONE: They are the individuals who 19 want to present documents. At that point they become 20 the movants, so why don't we ask them how many documents 21 and witnesses they are prepared to offer.

22 THE COURT: It shouldn't take long to get 23 the documents in. I would hope that in the pretrial
24 order that many of those documents could be admitted 25 as being genuine and their relevance admitted. They

1 may not all be conclusive at all, but it looks to me as 2 if a whole lot of those documents, at least they seem 3 to be authentic and they seem to have some relevance, 4 so I wouldn't think we would need to take much time on 5 documents.

6 MR. STONE: The problem is going to deal
7 with completeness, as I indicated out there, Your Honor.
8 I am going to have to get document examiners who are 9 research qualified who can tell you if those are com-10 plete documents at this point or whether they are 11 missing parts or missing other items that went with 12 them at the time. I know that is going to be the 13 problem with most of these documents.

14 I also know many of the live witnesses don't 15 recall whether those are complete documents. It's a 16 lot to ask of them, people in their seventies, to ask 17 if they remember. I have already tried and had many of 18 them say I can't remember what I did on my birthday 19 that year.

20 THE COURT: What time did you say?

21 THE CLERK: I think that we could take the 22 time, if it's going to be two days, and begin it on 23 November the 5th.

24 MR. STONE: We're not talking two days.
25 We're talking more like two weeks.

THE CLERK: Two weeks?

MR. STONE: Yes.

THE COURT: I'm not talking about two weeks.

MR. STONE: Okay. Then we maybe had better talk about scope again. Your Honor, I will be blunt. The reputations in that petition of a president of the United States are on the line. It draws the line to him. Secretary of War Stimson, the Attorney General, Assistant John J. McCloy, who was a public servant for many years. There are an awful lot of people whose reputations are on the line, and I know the Department wouldn't allow me to make half a presentation. I can conceive of only quite a lengthy presentation.

MR. HALL: May I think out loud?

THE COURT: All right.

MR. HALL: It may be desirable to appoint some kind of a master to help narrow the scope and to take maximum advantage of the Court's time, because it may not be necessary to proceed from as broad a range of format as counsel suggests, or as we may even think at this moment we want to proceed in. If this is a civil case we have some discovery options available that are not necessarily available to you in a criminal case, but it may be necessary to narrow the issues so that the Court's time is taken maximum advantage of.

THE COURT: I am just looking at a later date. Let me ask the petitioner, how long do you think it would take?

MR. HALL: Give us a wild guess, three days, four days.

MS. BANNAI: Maybe four days.

MR. HALL: It could conceivably be narrowed down.

MS. BANNAI: A lot would depend on how much is narrowed at the time of the pretrial order lodging with respect to documents.

THE COURT: Well, I think that about the only thing that I can do, even though I would like to get this heard as quickly as I can, where the Government says you may want a week or two weeks, is to try to find the first available time when I can give you two weeks of my time and set it down.

Why don't you give me that answer, if you would?

THE CLERK: I am still suggesting November the 5th. That's because all of those are 39.1's and if the first one goes away, you could put this in there in its place.

THE COURT: What about the others?

THE CLERK: They are 39.1's, also.

THE COURT: I am looking at the numbers of these other cases and they are '82 cases, so I really think this one should go -- should not knock those cases off in case they are still on and don't settle out. If they did settle out, of course you never know that until the last minute or the week before. I think all of you are entitled to a real notice when the hearing will be held, so I think I had better try to get the earliest time when I could maybe have a full hearing.

Are you looking at June, '85?

THE CLERK: Yes.

MR. HALL: Did I hear June of 1985?

THE COURT: That's what I said.

MR. HALL: Judge Bilby has said the WPPSS litigation will start June 1st, but he has also told the manager of the Doubletree Inn at Southcenter, which is where the trial may be held if it is tried in Seattle, that it looks like it will be tried January to June of 1986. He has set on the record a trial date of June 1st and he has not changed that. It is a six-month trial.

I mean I am not necessarily indispensable to the case and I think we could probably safely set the case in June and recognize that I can't be two places

1 at once, but I think the likelihood of the securities
2 case going to trial in June is marginal so maybe we 3 are safe. I just say that as spectrum --

4 THE COURT: I really hate to put it that far 5 off. Is there a time ahead of that?

6 THE CLERK: We don't have anything. We 7 have the Swinomish Tribe in December. We have the U.S.
8 Cruises in January; Pacific Northwest Bell in January.
9 They are going to be two to three weeks, and you have 10 Lynnwood Equipment, which is a 45-day trial.

11 MR. HALL: Maybe I could make another 12 suggestion. We could maybe, if the Court were willing 13 to do this, tell us that we should have our case pre-14 pared by X date and put on call on two weeks' notice.
15 Give us a trial date when you have the two weeks and 16 put us on call if an earlier case settles out.

17 THE COURT: What do you think about that?

18 MR. STONE: I don't know what documents they 19 are preparing to produce. I have looked at the docu-20 ments they have already produced and they don't convince 21 us. If they did, we would not have taken the position 22 we did, so I am not altogether sure what to expect.

23 Consequently, I don't know whether I will 24 need witnesses. I am very unsure that they represent 25 a complete record and since I don't believe they

1 represent a complete record, I am not sure that I won't 2 come back before Your Honor and tell you I need more 3 time because we have to hire consultants to go into 4 the national archives.

5 THE COURT: Of course you people have a
6 command of the records that the petitioner does not 7 have.

8 MR. STONE: That's not true, Your Honor. I 9 know you say that those records in the --

10 THE COURT: They may not be more available, 11 but you have all sorts of people.

12 MR. STONE: Just like when I get someone 13 from the outside on a nuclear energy subject. I have 14 already been told what I will have to do is get an 15 outside man, probably historical research people, if 16 I need them, to search the records, and I will have to 17 have them go through those records but completeness
18 is what worries me the most, and I will need substantial 19 lead time in order to make those kinds of investigations.

20 Also, another item which -- I would like to 21 get this but --

22 THE COURT: You go ahead.

23 MR. STONE: I was going to say there are a 24 couple of things I would like the Court orally to rule 25 on. The first is I want the Court to understand from

1 day one in this case and other cases, the Government 2 has been trying not to make this case more public and 3 more messy than it needs to be.

4 Consequently, we have intentionally attempted 5 to resolve it informally and not to file documents which 6 we thought tended to do no more than reopen issues that 7 might not need be reopened before they were absolutely 8 necessary. I would like the Court's permission to 9 continue to operate in that mode. I don't wish to have 10 to file things long in advance of knowing that we 11 actually are going to require them.

12 I would also like to be assured this is a 13 post-conviction criminal proceeding because I don't 14 wish to have to file a plethora of motions to shorten
15 times and have opposition to motions that I frankly 16 find frivolous in a hearing. I don't want to have to do 17 that. I hope you will set that to rest by saying this 18 is a post-conviction criminal proceedings and if there 19 are special rules to be applied, we will agree then.
20 We will always agree to give them more time.

21 THE COURT: Well, I am afraid I can't put 22 out a blanket ruling now on these things because I 23 don't know really what they are, but Susan Barnes is 24 right here in the city and she and her office always 25 has access to my office. If something comes up that

1 she feels or you feel is improper, a motion could 2 quickly be made to me.

3 MR. STONE: It is not so much that as we 4 want to put on the record that we don't feel, in the 5 exercise of our discretion, that it is appropriate to 6 be filing things as soon as possible. Indeed, just 7 the opposite is true, because these are very 8 sensitive issues. We propose to file them as near to 9 actual hearing dates as possible, because if I am filing
10 a document that may in some newspaper reporter's mind 11 impugn the integrity of Mr. McCloy or Mr. Ennis, who 12 are in their eighties, I don't wish to have to do that.

13 I don't think in their eighties they should 14 be bombarded with reporters on Sixty Minutes who still 15 thinks it's time to face these things. It is par-16 ticularly sensitive.

17 I know just from having seen Mr. McCloy
18 write letters to the New York Times that he can -- 19 he is eighty-eight -- he gets pretty agitated, per-20 sonally, because he feels the issues often go to his 21 integrity as a person and have nothing to do with the 22 way he may have handled his job, and I would like the 23 Court to give me permission to recognize those concerns 24 while we handle this litigation.

25 THE COURT: Well, I just really cannot put

1 out orders in advance on that, saying to you that --

2 MR. STONE: Okay.

3 THE COURT: -- that you are to withhold and 4 have the privilege of withholding your exhibits to 5 trial time because, of course, they've got to see them.

6 MR. HALL: I think we can work something out 7 between us.

8 THE COURT: You should be able to. You can 9 identify the exhibit in the pretrial order and show the 10 exhibit in private to counsel.

11 MR. STONE: Okay.

12 THE COURT: Let's see if we can work out
13 some kind of a procedure here. Let me get back to you 14 on a date. Although the suggestion that you make about 15 getting the thing ready so that if time opens up for 16 me I could give you time, maybe what we ought to do is 17 to go far in advance with a time where we definitely 18 could hear it and give you that date, and put it on 19 your calendar so we've got it.

20 THE CLERK: June, 1985?

21 THE COURT: June of '85.

22 THE CLERK: All right. The 17th.

23 THE COURT: That will be the ultimate date, 24 June, 1985.

25 Now, on the pretrial order, I think what we

1 ought to do is to have the petitioner by a certain date, 2 and I will give you the date pretty soon, come out with 3 your contentions, and our rule is not more than two 4 pages. We don't want a whole bunch of specifics about 5 your contentions, but I would assume it would be some-6 thing like this: Petitioner was deprived of due process
7 because the Government concealed information which it 8 had, and that sort of thing, with more specificity than 9 what I am saying right there, and then I would want the 10 petitioner to set forth the list of exhibits that it 11 would propose to introduce, and it may be before that 12 time that you could serve some kind of request for 13 admissions upon the Government that these are genuine 14 documents.

15 MR. HALL: Exactly. I just wrote that down.
16 And if they are incomplete, in what way are they 17 incomplete, and so forth.

18 THE COURT: Right. I don't know whether 19 you have live witnesses at this time that you intended 20 to put on, other than perhaps the petitioner.

21 MR. HALL: We may wish to take - I don't 22 know if they are adverse witnesses, but Mr. Ennis. I 23 don't know. I think that's a definite possibility.

24 THE COURT: Well, his position is pretty 25 well set forth in his memorandum, isn't it?

MR. HALL: I think so. I'm not sure what he can add.

MR. STONE: No, Your Honor. He is going to be able to add why he signed those pleadings, why he filed them, why for twenty years he never said anything to his clients about what interpretation that now could be put on it; committed misconduct, left the Government, joined that group and never told them about it. Those would have been relevant. None of that is in those pleadings.

THE COURT: On the requirements I have set down for the petitioner, when can you do that? By what time?

MR. HALL: I would think it would take about three months.

THE COURT: This is May. June, July, August. Is that right? Why don't you give me a date in August?

MR. HALL: Basically what we're doing is preparing the initial draft, our initial proposal of pretrial order for submission to counsel.

THE COURT: I think that would be a good way to look at it, and then you will have an idea by seeing that and the exhibits and the contentions what you will need to do to meet it.

THE CLERK: July 27th is the last Friday.

THE COURT: I thought I said August. They want three months. Why don't you give me a Friday?

THE CLERK: August the 17th.

MS. BARNES: Your Honor, I would like to ask, there is a new pretrial effective rule.

THE COURT: Do it under the new rule.

MS. BARNES: Well, the new rule, notwithstanding its title, does everything else as well. It sets out schedules for discovery cutoff, sets up schedules for the cutoff of dispositive motions and all kinds of other things. I think this is a criminal proceeding. There is no problem with tracking that, but we are already starting to vary from it. I guess we need to know whether we are following it.

THE COURT: I would think that because this is a rather peculiar proceeding, what we might do is move along the lines that I'm talking about now.

MS. BARNES: Set our own time schedule?

THE COURT: Set our own time schedules so that by August 17th, the petitioner is to serve on opposing counsel your proposed segments of the pretrial order.

MR. STONE: Plus Xerox exhibits?

MR. HALL: Or references to.

MR. STONE: References to exhibits we already

1 have.

2 MR. HALL: Yes. All right.

3 THE COURT: Yes. Just so that you either have 4 a copy or have access to a copy. That's right. Then, 5 how much time, and if something comes up that makes 6 it necessary for you to come in to ask for more time,
7 I think I would probably grant it, but how much time do 8 you think you would need to respond with your section 9 of the proposed pretrial order?

10 MR. STONE: I would like about five months.

11 THE CLERK: That would be January 25th, 12 1985.

13 MR. STONE: I would like to know that if I 14 need to get requests for admissions from the end of 15 discovery at that point, that is still permissible, 16 Your Honor?

17 THE COURT: Let me ask about discovery. What 18 is your mutual pleasure about discovery, that is, do 19 you want to move ahead with the discovery now?

20 MR. STONE: No, Your Honor. I would like to 21 wait until I see what actual documents I get.

22 MR. HALL: I think probably the first thing 23 we would do is send out a request for admissions and 24 interrogatories with regard to any admissions or requests 25 they are not able to admit and why, for example, is the document not complete, or whatever, that kind of thing, and also maybe a request with regard to admissibility.

THE COURT: What?

MR. HALL: With regard to trial admissibility, or if it is not admissible, in their opinion why.

MS. BANNAI: Another thing that comes to mind is that counsel mentioned the supplemental report. We would like to learn what documents are behind the Government's position on that.

THE COURT: First, I might say that on the -- is it "Personal Justice Denied?" Am I saying it correctly?

MR. STONE: Yes.

THE COURT: I would not consider either that or the supplemental report, either of those documents to be admissible because they are secondary sources. Just by chance, because I thought of the people having something to do with it, I have gone through all the books on magic, eight or ten volumes, I believe. I don't know that they would have any great relevance.

MR. STONE: Oh, they will, Your Honor.

THE COURT: You think so?

MR. STONE: I guarantee it.

THE COURT: I'll leave it up to you.

1 MS. BANNAI: We may have some discovery
2 from the Government.

3 MR. STONE: They have already seen all of 4 the original documents, files. Particularly, Irons
5 came and for the second time went through our files.
6 To the extent I have information gleaned from the 7 National Archives, I will have to find out whether the 8 Department will give me permission to use that. I
9 will tell you very bluntly right now that the Depart-
10 ment instructed me not to prepare for Your Honor a 11 reply that went to the merits because they did not 12 wish to throw open to the public a record and make it 13 appear we still wished to deny relief, substantively.
14 I don't know whether they will change their position 15 and until I know that, I am not in a position to take 16 any materials and turn them over.

17 If none of them are Government documents, I 18 am not required consequently under discovery to give 19 them to them. They are all public materials in the 20 National Archives. It is just that I spent a reason-21 able amount of time -- if we decide to use them, then 22 certainly at that point they will come out in the pre-23 trial order. I don't propose to use anything that is 24 a Government possessed document at this point that we 25 possess and, consequently, if that determination is made, I will let Your Honor know.

1 That is one of the kinds of things -- that 2 is one of the kinds of points I was making before.
3 The Commission itself wouldn't wish to reopen the very 4 touchy question of whether the magic documents them-
5 selves, whether all the rest of the hundreds of pages 6 and the Government itself was loath to get into that.
7 We may well.

8 THE COURT: Well, with this schedule, if 9 we put January 25th as being the date when you make 10 your proposal, it sort of puts out of the question 11 that time may open up and we can try it before June.

12 Now, I would be inclined myself to defer 13 deposition discovery until after we get these other 14 things filed and then have another conference and let 15 me look at it and see what discovery is needed, and let 16 me rule on it.

17 MR. HALL: May I suggest that no one has 18 made a secret of the fact that some of these witnesses 19 are elderly. I would respectfully suggest it might 20 be appropriate to permit some preservation depositions 21 earlier than January 25th or February 25th of next 22 year.

23 THE COURT: Well, I think I am going to stay 24 the discovery until after these filings have been made.
25 Then let's take a look at it and see what if any

1 depositions needs to be taken.

2 MR. HALL: I think the record should reflect 3 that we respectfully take exception to that for the 4 reasons I have stated.

5 THE COURT: Now, is there anything else we 6 can do other than work towards these particular dates?
7 Anything else we can do today?

8 MR. HALL: Maybe we can open up dialogue
9 again.

10 MR. STONE: I gather, Your Honor, on the 11 basis of what you said before about your not wanting 12 to grant the Government's motion at this time, that 13 perhaps down around January 25th you might be in a 14 position to consider it again?

15 THE COURT: I made that ruling today without 16 prejudice to your renewing the motion, and I will take 17 a look at it. I certainly can understand and really 18 be sympathetic with the positions being taken by both 19 sides. The petitioner here wants vindication and I 20 think he has a right to have a court rule upon that.
21 On the other hand, I can well understand the Govern-22 ment's really laudible motive here in not reopening old 23 wounds. I really am not critical of the position taken 24 by the Government. I fully understand it.

get out an order about the rulings I made today. I know it is going to be a skeleton order on the motion I considered and my ruling upon it.

MR. STONE: I hope you will at least treat -- I hate to ask you to treat one thing -- I hope you will at least treat the fact of our reply -- in fact, maybe I should give you the section that deals not with whether that is newly discovered and not with whether they go to whether relief is warranted.

THE COURT: Materiality?

MR. STONE: The section that talks about whether or not we have some case in controversy. That runs from page 5 through 17.

THE COURT: I don't want to hear it on argument, but why do you say there is no case or controversy?

MR. STONE: Well, Your Honor, there are an awful lot of cases that say that social stigma is simply not grounds for a coram nobis.

THE COURT: Let me look at the brief and the response made by the petitioner to that.

MR. STONE: If I can say two more sentences, Your Honor, because they got the last word and I haven't replied. Let me just say if Your Honor wants me, after reading our brief, to make some answer, we will be happy to. They cited two cases, one of which is a felony case and the other they describe as a misdemeanor contempt case. Under 18 USC, all contempt cases would be classified as felonies. That is a point we would ask to address.

THE COURT: All right. The trial date, would you give me that again?

THE CLERK: June 17th.

THE COURT: June 17th. That will be the trial date unless we get together and agree on another date. Then, with respect to the pretrial order, the petitioner's sections are due August 17th; the Government's sections due January 25th, and then at that time we will have a status conference.

MS. BANNAI: Your Honor, one question on the pretrial order format. You have talked about doing the admitted facts and the exhibits. I take it we probably couldn't do the witness sections because we haven't had discovery.

MR. HALL: We will fill in as much of the format as possible and leave the rest blank.

THE COURT: That's right, with the privilege of putting the witnesses in later.
