GORDON K. HIRABAYASHI,

Defendant Petitioner,

v.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,

Plaintiff Respondent.

No. C83-122V
(Former Crim.
No. 45738)

GOVERNMENT'S MEMORANDUM OF LAW

As set forth in the government's proposed prehearing order, there are four major issues of law relevant to this hearing:

(1) Whether petitioner has shown sound reasons for failing to seek appropriate relief earlier.

(2) Whether petitioner has shown present adverse legal consequences sufficient to create an actual case or controversy.

(3) Whether petitioner (a) has carried his burden of rebutting the presumption of regularity that attaches to the original proceedings, and if so (b) whether petitioner has carried his burden of proving that intentional governmental misconduct occurred prior to his conviction which rendered "irregular and void" his misdemeanor curfew violation and (c) which "precluded" affirmance of his conviction on any ground.

1 And, assuming that the Court believes that this subject is 2 within the scope of this Court's earlier order defining the 3 subject matter of this hearing (which we deny), then:

4 (4) Whether the government had a constitutional obligation, 5 after the affirmance of petitioner's conviction in the Supreme 6 Court, to initiate sua sponte this collateral proceeding on 7 petitioner's behalf. We point out that the government's earlier 8 pleadings in this case have exhaustively briefed these issues.
9 A more concise inventory of our primary legal arguments follows.

10 The legal standards by which a petition for a writ of coram 11 nobis is judged are well settled. As set forth in United 12 States v. Darnell, 716 F.2d 479, 481 n.5 (7th Cir. 1983):

13 A coram nobis petitioner . . . is confronted with judicial-14 ly-created standards that severely circumscribe the avail-15 ability of the writ. [Coram nobis] limits the 16 issues that may be raised to those "of the most fundamental 17 character." United States v. Morgan, 346 U.S. [502] at 511.
18 * * * It is presumed that the challenged proceedings were 19 correct and a heavy burden rests on the petitioner to 20 demonstrate otherwise. In addition, a standard akin to the 21 "actual prejudice" standard is applied: the coram nobis 22 petitioner must demonstrate that but for the fundamental 23 errors committed a more favorable judgment would have been 24 rendered. United States v. Dellinger, 657 F.2d 140, 144 n.6 25 (7th Cir. 1981). The petitioner also must demonstrate 26 present adverse legal consequences flowing from the conviction sufficient to satisfy the "case or controversy" requirements of Article III. Id. Finally, in Morgan, the Supreme Court stated that there must be "sound reason" for the petitioner's "failure to seek appropriate earlier relief." United States v. Morgan, 346 U.S. at 512. * * * The doctrine of laches adequately protects against "sandbagging" and ensures that coram nobis relief will not be granted where a petitioner's inexcusable delay in raising this claim has prejudiced the government. See Norris v. United States, 687 F.2d at 910 (Cudahy, J., concurring). These safeguards against abuse of the writ serve essentially the same function as the cause and prejudice standard.

1 Accordingly, this memorandum will discuss the law applicable
2 to each of these legal issues and will demonstrate that peti-
3 tioner is not entitled to coram nobis relief. 1/

4 1. Petitioner has the burden of proving "sound reasons" for 5 his failure to seek appropriate relief earlier.

6 A recent Ninth Circuit opinion, Maghe v. United States, 710
7 F.2d 503 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 103 S.Ct. 3549 (1983), 8 restated the rule announced by the Supreme Court in United 9 States v. Morgan, 346 U.S. 502, 512 (1954):

10 To be entitled to a writ of coram nobis, Maghe must show 11 that, there are "sound reasons" for his failure to seek 12 relief earlier. United States v. Morgan, 346 U.S. 502, 512, 13 74 S.Ct. 247, 253, 98 L.Ed. 248 (1954). The district court 14 properly denied Maghe's petition without a hearing because 15 he failed to allege an adequate factual basis justifying his 16 25-year delay in seeking relief. See United States v.
17 Taylor, 648 F.2d 565, 573 (9th Cir.), cert. denied, 545 U.S.
18 866, 102 S.Ct. 329, 70 L.Ed.2d 168 (1981).

19 The court then went on to explain that a prior lack of 20 interest or a newly acquired interest in seeking relief is not a 21 "sound reason" that will justify a long delay in seeking legal 22 relief. Accord United States v. Correa-DeJesus, 708 F.2d 1283, 23 1286 (7th Cir. 1983).

24 1/ Submission of this memorandum is made without prejudice to 25 the right of the United States to submit, sua sponte, additional 26 memoranda of law to the Court up to our forty page limit based upon petitioner's submissions and issues raised at the hearing.

1           2. Petitioner must demonstrate present adverse legal 2 consequences.

3           Petitioner must demonstrate present adverse legal 4 consequences flowing from his conviction. Absent such adverse 5 legal consequences there is no justiciable case or 6 controversey. 2/

7           Collateral attacks upon old criminal convictions, where the 8 sentence has already been served, are moot "if it is shown that 9 there is no possibility that any collateral legal consequences 10 will be imposed on the basis of the challenged conviction."
11 Sibron v. New York, 392 U.S. 40, 57 (1968); United States v.
12 Morgan, supra, 346 U.S. at 512-513; Ybarra v. United States, 13 supra; Chavez v. United States, 447 F.2d 1373 (9th Cir. 1971).
14 This doctrine was recently discussed in Lane v. Williams, 455 15 U.S. 624, 632 (1982). There, the Supreme Court noted that the 16 typical legal consequences which warranted an exercise of 17 collateral relief involved civil penalties such as loss of the 18 right to vote, the right to serve as an official of a labor 19 union for a specified period of time, or to engage in certain 20 businesses. None of those allegations are made here. The 21 misdemeanor conviction at issue does not deprive petitioner of 22

23
24
25 2/ Although this court has previously ruled on this issue, the 26 respondent preserves this jurisdictional objection.

1 any of his civil rights (to vote, etc.). As in Lane v.
2 Williams, supra, since no felony violations are involved

3 *** No civil disabilities such as those present in Carafas 4 [v. La Valle, 391 U.S. 234] result . . . At most, certain 5 nonstatutory consequences may occur; employment prospects, or 6 the sentence imposed in a future criminal proceeding, could 7 be affected *** The discretionary decisions that are made by 8 an employer or a sentencing judge, however, are not governed 9 by the mere presence or absence of a recorded violation . .
Any disabilities that flow from what respondents did . . .
are not removed or even affected by a District Court order . . . In these circumstances, no live controversy remains.

10 In St. Pierre v. United States, 319 U.S. 41, 43 (1943) the 11 Supreme Court stated that it is an insufficient allegation, as a 12 matter of law, to allege as a present adverse legal consequence 13 "that the judgment may impair [the petitioner's] 14 credibility . . . in any future legal proceeding." In Sibron, 15 the Court did not overrule that holding, but rather revalidated 16 and took considerable pains to distinguish it on the unique 17 facts present in Sibron. In this regard, the Sibron opinion 18 states, 392 U.S. at 56 fn. 17:

19 We note that there is a clear distinction between a 20 general impairment of credibility, to which the Court 21 referred in St. Pierre, see 319 U.S., at 43, and New York's 22 specific statutory authorization for use of the conviction to impeach the "character" of a defendant in a criminal proceeding. The latter is a clear legal disability deliberately and specifically imposed by the legislature.
(Emphasis added.)

23 In the instant case, this "clear distinction" between a 24 general and specific impairment of credibility is totally 25 absent. There is no specific statutory disability imposed by 26

1 the federal legislature attaching to this misdemeanor 2 conviction. Indeed, just the opposite is true here. The 3 federal legislature has repealed the statute involved in the 4 instant case, 18 U.S.C. § 1383, and enacted 18 U.S.C. § 4001(a) 5 to prohibit the repetition of any similar executive orders.

6 If petitioner and this Court were correct that the "remote" 7 possibility of impeachment from a forty year old, already 8 repealed malum prohibitum misdemeanor in some undetermined state 9 or foreign legal forum is a sufficient disability to maintain a 10 case or controversy, then the above-quoted language from Sibron 11 was totally unnecessary and St. Pierre has been overruled, not 12 distinguished. Every outstanding conviction, no matter how 13 slight its effect, could hypothetically lead to impeachment in 14 some forum and would therefore be sufficient, per se, to 15 maintain collateral review. That result would render St. Pierre 16 a nullity and would have obviated the Sibron decision's careful 17 language distinguishing, not overruling, St. Pierre. See, e.g., 18 392 U.S. at 56 fn. 17 supra and also at pp. 51, 53 & fn. 13, and 19 57.

20 The second adverse legal consequence that petitioner and now 21 this Court have identified, "that the conviction will become a 22 consideration in some future sentencing," is also legally 23 insufficient. That too is universally true of all convictions 24 in every conceivable hypothetical situation. Therefore, this 25 ruling is also in direct conflict with the continued viability 26 of St. Pierre. Once again, in Sibron a specific legislative

1 provision in the New York Criminal Code mandated that any 2 subsequent repetition of that misdemeanor conduct (possession 3 of burglary tools) by Sibron would thereafter be treated as a 4 felony. 392 U.S. at 56 & at 48 fn. 5. That kind of specific 5 legislative penalty enhancement is not present in this case. In 6 contrast, the mere speculative possibility that "the sentence 7 imposed in a future criminal proceeding, could be affected" not 8 only by the underlying conduct (which a federal judge is always 9 free to consider, see 18 U.S.C. § 3577), but additionally by the 10 judgment of conviction, was recently reconsidered in Lane v.
11 Williams, 455 U.S. 624, 632 (1982) and rejected over Justice
12 Marshall's dissent on that very point, 455 U.S. at 637.

13 Furthermore, the record in this case shows that this 14 conviction is not within the Sibron rule because it is not like 15 "most criminal convictions" which we readily concede ordinarily 16 entail adverse consequences. Most criminal convictions, 17 however, either involve a felony with its concomitant loss of 18 civil rights, or involve moral turpitude, or are malum in se, or 19 involve statutory crimes which have not long ago been 20 legislatively repealed and discredited. They do not commonly 21 involve situations where the defendant marches into the police 22 station demanding to be arrested for a regulatory violation in 23 order to test its constitutionality in the Supreme Court.

1        3. Petitioner has the burden to rebut the presumption of 2 regularity and to prove intentional government misconduct prior 3 to conviction rendering his misdemeanor curfew violation 4 irregular and void and precluding affirmance of his conviction 5 on any ground.

6        The petitioner has the "heavy burden" of rebutting the 7 presumption that the challenged proceedings were correct.
8 United States v. Darnell, 716 F.2d at 481 n.5. See also INS v.
9 Miranda 459 U.S. 14, 18 (1982) (presumption of regularity).
10 Further, he must "demonstrate that but for fundamental errors 11 committed a more favorable judgment would have been rendered."
12 Id. The Supreme Court stated in United States v. Frady, 456
13 U.S. 152, 166 (1982), that "to obtain collateral relief a 14 [petitioner] must clear a significantly higher hurdle than would 15 exist on direct appeal," that is, the petitioner must satisfy 16 the "cause and actual prejudice" standard. The controlling 17 caselaw in this Circuit requires that coram nobis petitions be 18 resolved in the same manner as habeas corpus proceedings.
19 United States v. Taylor, 648 F.2d 565, 573 n. 25 (9th Cir.), 20 cert. denied, 454 U.S. 866 (1981). Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107
21 (1982), clearly applies to similarly situated habeas corpus 22 petitioners in this Circuit. Leiterman v. Rushen, 704 F.2d 442, 23 444 (9th Cir. 1983) (on habeas corpus, Engle v. Isaac requires 24 "actual prejudice," i.e., some "causal nexus" between even a 25 "massive [governmental] violation of due process" and the 26 conviction); Magby v. Wawrzaszek, 741 F.2d 240, 244 (9th Cir.

1 1984) (on habeas corpus, petitioner who has shown no "cause"
2 cannot raise a Miranda claim if he failed to raise the challenge 3 at trial and had "the tools" to do so). Furthermore, the 4 "cause" and "actual prejudice" tests must be satisfied
5 independently and sequentially. Engle v. Isaac, 456 U.S. 107, 6 134 n. 43 (1982); United States ex rel. Devine v. DeRobertis, 7 754 F.2d 764, 768 (7th Cir. 1985) (on habeas corpus, the Court 8 need not reach "actual prejudice" unless the petitioner has 9 first established "cause"); Palmes v. Wainwright, 725 F.2d 1511, 10 1525-1526 (11th Cir.), cert. denied, 105 S.Ct. 227 (1984)
11 (same); Williams v. Duckworth, 724 F.2d 1439, 1443 (7th Cir.), 12 cert. denied, 105 S.Ct. 143 (1984) (same).

13 In addition, the doctrine of res judicata bars the 14 petitioner from reopening his case simply to relitigate issues 15 because his decision to disobey the statute in 1942 might have 16 been more favorably treated in 1983. The Supreme Court in 17 Federated Department Stores, Inc. v. Moitie, 452 U.S. 394, 18 401-02 (1981), stated in words equally applicable here :

19 This court has long recognized that "[p]ublic policy 20 dictates that there be an end of litigation; that those who 21 have contested an issue shall be bound by the result of the 22 contest, and that matters once tried shall be considered 23 forever settled as between the parties." Baldwin v.
24 Traveling Men's Assn., 283 U.S. 522, 525 (1931).

25 The Court also stated, 452 U.S. at 398:

26 . . . the res judicata consequences of a final . . .
judgment on the merits [are not] altered by the fact that the judgment may have been wrong or rested on a legal principle subsequently overruled in another case. Angel v.
Bullington, 330 U.S. 183, 182 (1947); Chicot County Drainage
District v. Baxter State Bank, 308 U.S. 371 (1940); Wilson's Executor v. Dean, 121 U.S. 525, 534 (1887).

1 Current case law may or may not divest petitioner's Supreme 2 Court decision (and the Mitchell v. Harmony, 54 U.S. (13 How.) 3 115, 134-5 (1851) line of cases) of any current stare decisis
4 effect. But such subsequent rulings cannot redetermine the earlier 5 case for the particular individual who litigated and lost that 6 earlier case. 3/

7 The recent opinion in Korematsu v. United States, 584 F.
8 Supp. 1406 (N.D. Cal. 1984) ignored these impediments to coram 9 nobis relief for two reasons. That court concluded that the 10 government had waived various jurisdictional objections which 11 that court implicitly held were waivable. (Exhibit 1 of 12 Government's Exhibits to its Supplemental Points and Authorities 13 (hereinafter "G.Ex.")). Those factual and legal circumstances 14 -- even if true in that case (which we deny) -- are not true 15 here. In addition, the Korematsu court stated that the Ninth 16 Circuit decision in United States v. Taylor, 648 F.2d 565 (9th 17 Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 866 (1981) permitted a district

18 _____
19 3/ Since petitioner argues that the Supreme Court erroneously 20 decided the issues in his case, a reappraisal of those old legal 21 rulings would necessarily constitute "a clear break with the 22 past" and would have been nonretroactive. United States v.
23 Johnson, 457 U.S. 537, 549 (1982). Thus, petitioner's 24 conviction would not have been vulnerable to collateral attack 25 on these grounds alleging "new case law" even if another 26 litigant (such as Korematsu) not barred by the doctrine of res judicata had succeeded in overturning the Hirabayashi case law in the very next term.

In other words, even if United States v. Korematsu, 323 U.S.
214 (1944) had been decided differently, that would not have helped this petitioner.

1 court to grant coram nobis relief even when "arguable prejudice" 2 is not shown, therefore creating an exception to the 3 well-established contrary rule laid down in United States v.
4 Morgan, 346 U.S. 502 (1954) (G. Ex. 1, p.26).

5 The opinion in Korematsu misreads the Taylor opinion. The 6 Taylor court stated that "...we address solely the issue of 7 whether Taylor has demonstrated that he is entitled to a hearing 8 and do not decide whether relief is warranted." 648 F.2d at 9 570. Taylor went on to cite Morgan and restate the general rule 10 that coram nobis relief is only available "to correct 11 errors of fact of such fundamental character as to render the 12 proceeding itself irregular and invalid" Id. at n.14. Then the 13 court stated that "Taylor's claim gives rise to the somber 14 prospect that the Government committed a fraud on the court
15 which ultimately worked a great prejudice to Taylor's case." 648 16 F.2d at 571 (emphasis added). In that context -- where great 17 prejudice to the petitioner's case was at issue -- the Taylor 18 court stated that a hearing on a coram nobis petition (not 19 ultimate relief) could be premised on allegations of 20 prosecutorial misconduct.

21 All of these predicates to the Taylor language were ignored 22 by the Korematsu court which improperly relied on language in 23 the opinion -- taken out of context -- as the basis for a new 24 Ninth Circuit exception to the Morgan rule allowing ultimate 25 coram nobis relief (not simply a hearing), when no actual 26 prejudice has been proved. Moreover, even if this conclusion

1 were not contrary to the intent of the Taylor court, see 648
2 F.2d at 570 & n.14, it runs contrary to Morgan itself, as well 3 as United States v. Hasting, 103 S.Ct. 1974 (1983) and United 4 States v. Morrison, 449 U.S. 361, 365-367 (1981).

5 4. There is no obligation upon the government to initiate 6 this collateral proceeding on petitioner's behalf.

7 Finally, even assuming arguendo that the government newly 8 discovered some exculpatory material relevant to petitioner's 9 case after his conviction had been affirmed by the Supreme 10 Court, the government has no obligation to initiate this 11 collateral proceeding on petitioner's behalf. Petitioner has 12 cited no authority that the government must initiate 13 collateral attacks whenever some evidence comes to light which 14 might arguably be exculpatory.

15 Respectfully submitted,
