Resources for Teaching about Racism and Police Violence

Remember

racism inflicts trauma;
seek ways to attend to this trauma.

we are responsible to each other.

we all have a role in this.

white people need to listen first, and a lot.

to believe what communities of color say.

anti-racism is our goal.
Not avoiding race. Not colorblindness.

Thoughts & Advice

FROM FAMILIES OF COLOR

We know that there are white people who are allies amid the protest.

Black people have a right to be angry.

We need more Black teachers.

There needs to be honest/transparent conversations about Black history. It is not enough to cover it only in the month of February.

Talk to Black families like they matter.

Educate Black children as if your life depends on it.

Use your school funds to provide counseling and support for your African American students.

Set up African American family/teacher organizations.

Bring in African American guest speakers to your classroom.

Listen to the African American teachers in your school. Listen a lot.
