Better from the President

The only gift is a portion of thyself.

- Ralph Waldo Emerson

Since the University of San Diego was founded 44 years ago, we have been blessed with gifts of time, talent and financial support from the community — assistance that has enabled us to build a tradition based on academic excellence and a commitment to Catholic values. As the university matures, it is only fitting that we share with this same community the gifts of our endeavors — our resources, programs and expertise.

Far from an “ivory tower,” USD is a thriving center of education that concerns itself with the issues facing the surrounding community. Often, the university is a leader of change through academic programs or research projects that address problems in San Diego and beyond. In the pages that follow, USD students, faculty and staff report on some of their latest ventures in such areas as community service, public enlightenment and spiritual ministry.

The reports are compelling. Tackling children's issues through public policy and juvenile law, students in the School of Law's new Child Advocacy Clinic are on their way to becoming child advocates. An economist in the School of Business Administration is tracking the health of San Diego's economy through the USD Index of Leading Economic Indicators, the definitive source on the “state of the city” for local government and business leaders. A USD theologian has made Alcalá Park the editorial base for a new academic journal, the latest development from a department at the forefront of the young field of Latino theology. And people throughout campus are lending their skills to a myriad of community service projects ranging from tutoring to mentoring to mediation.

Through your support, we are twice blessed — by enabling us to uphold our academic mission and by making it possible to share our knowledge and skills with the community. In today's difficult economic times, both are increasingly important.

As we near the end of 1993, we have much to be thankful for and many to thank, especially each of you who has given generously of yourself to further USD's mission. In turn, we strive to work for the common good, enhancing the life of the community with the lasting gifts of our endeavors.

AUTHOR E. HUGHES, PH.D.
PRESIDENT

There once was a beautiful alabaster citadel that sat high on a hill and sparkled in the sunlight. Its domes and towers could be seen for miles around. The people in the valley below often gazed up at the citadel and wondered: What kind of beings inhabit that radiant place? Do they know we are down here? Do they care?

Throughout its 44-year history, the University of San Diego has been renowned for its emphasis on academic excellence and its commitment to Catholic values, as well as its physical beauty.

But what of its relevance to the world at large? Does this educational citadel care about the people in the valley below? Does the quality of USD's scholarship contribute to the quality of life beyond the campus gates?

These questions are very much on the minds of the university's constituents, especially now, at what is a critical juncture in USD's history.

Three factors have motivated USD to reflect anew on its relationships with the outside community:

- ✦ An imminent transition of leadership at USD, with the pending retirements of President Author E. Hughes and Academic Vice President and Provost Sister Sally Furay, RSCJ, has provided an occasion for USD to re-examine its mission and its purpose.
- ✦ The continuing stasis of the global economy has compelled the best and brightest in every society to strive harder for the common good.
- ✦ Dwindling resources for education have meant that all institutions of higher learning — and particularly private colleges and universities — may be called upon to demonstrate the tangible results of their endeavors.

"Educating young people is the basic mission of this institution, and we carry out that mission in two very different ways," Hughes says. "Through the formal structure of faculty-student curricular interaction, we communicate fundamental knowledge. And, equally important, through the structure of experiential learning, we communicate values."

"It is not enough to send forth young people who will succeed in their fields because they have mastered their studies. We also must send forth young people who will improve the world around them because they have embraced altruism and honor," he adds.

Preparing students to become complete citizens is the most apparent way that USD contributes to the community at large. But the citadel on the hill also works in less obvious ways to enhance the lives of others. Some examples:

- ✦ Volunteerism and community support are a way of life at Alcalá Park. "There's a strong sense of service that pervades this institution," Sister Furay says.
- ✦ Faculty and students routinely share their research findings and their expertise with practitioners of law, nursing, business, engineering and other professions.
- ✦ Student-athletes and other undergraduates serve as mentors to area youngsters who are looking for guidance.
- ✦ By providing stable employment and attracting out-of-town visitors, USD helps bolster the local economy.

Taking the 3 R's on the Road

A FEW HOURS EACH WEEK, USD STUDENTS TRADE COLLEGE TEXTBOOKS FOR ELEMENTARY SCHOOLBOOKS.

Twice a week, USD sophomore Naomi McAuliffe puts down her college textbooks and picks up elementary school reading books with Rita, her 10-year-old learning partner. It is reward enough to know that Rita's reading and writing are improving and that she is now in an accelerated program at her school. But when Rita's mom gave Naomi a warm hug and a sincere "thank you," she knew that the four hours she spends tutoring Rita each week are hours well spent.

Naomi and her roommate, sophomore Carol Dieringer, are the project coordinators of the Family Learning Center, one of 15 community service projects sponsored by USD's Associated Students. For this project, USD students spend 30 hours each semester tutoring at a San Diego public housing complex and an additional 12 hours in a literacy seminar on campus. Though their focus is on tutoring the children in the program, the students can help the parents at times also. This year's waiting list proves that demand exceeds supply once again.

The USD students work one-on-one with their learning partners in a community center at the complex or in the child's home. Tutoring in or near the home makes for better learning, Naomi says. "It's a lot more comfortable atmosphere for the kids. They are with people who really care about them, so they are more open to learning. A lot of kids at school tease. If you are home with a tutor, that tutor is not going to make fun of you if you mess up a word or a sentence structure."

Naomi considers the time commitment meager. "It's only four hours out of our entire week, but it can make the difference in a student getting good grades at school, which will enable him or her to get some type of scholarship."

As the students quietly go about their business, others are taking notice of their work. In 1991, the San Diego Housing Commission recognized the students' contribution with a Shelter Award in the Housing Innovation category.

This year, the U.S. Department of Education invited USD's Student Literacy Corps — which includes the Family Learning Center tutors — to participate in a study concerning the effect of literacy tutoring on learners. The study will examine changes in literacy skills, attitudes and behaviors, and will identify what is helpful for learners in the tutoring process. To measure the changes, tutors are giving participating learners a series of written surveys as well as conducting interviews with them throughout the fall semester.

USD is one of only nine universities in the country selected to participate in this study. The Department of Education will compile the results from the nine universities and produce a final report, which will be available to literacy programs nationwide.

Studies and procedures aside, to Naomi McAuliffe, effective tutoring means giving people the tools to better themselves or their lot in life. "At the housing complex, it's a chain they have to break, this chain of poverty," she says. "Education is their only chance to move up in the system, to make a good life for themselves. We're trying to help them achieve that goal."

"Altruism is present at every level of this university. It's not just students, or faculty, or administrators. Our staff are heavily involved in their communities, taking on everything from Little League to health care to culture and the arts."

- ✦ The university enriches the intellectual and cultural life of the region by hosting symposia, lectures, concerts and other events open to the public.
- ✦ USD helps ensure respect for the dignity of every human being through its emphatic commitment to cultural diversity, a commitment that has been furthered by the generosity of The James Irvine Foundation.
- ✦ Last, but not least, USD has become a center for spiritual ministry where scholars of every faith can explore their doctrinal heritage.

These are some of the ways that USD works on behalf of the people outside the gates. "This university has been sustained by the community at every stage of its maturation," Hughes says. "We think it's imperative that we give back to the community in every way that we can."

THE GIFT OF COMMUNITY SERVICE

Twice each semester, several USD vans pull into the Hahn University Center parking lot to load up an eclectic group of volunteers, including students, faculty, staff, administrators and trustees. The vans are dispatched to neighborhoods around San Diego that need a little help — someone to feed the homeless, or tutor the children, or hand out the blankets.

Urban Plunge, like all of USD's community service and volunteer programs, is a hands-on process of finding real-world solutions to real-world problems.

"It's really about enlightenment, about seeing what's going on outside your own life," says student volunteer Katie Artz. "You don't help other people without helping yourself."

At USD, volunteering isn't just a do-good, feel-good sometime thing. More than two-thirds of the undergraduate student body become involved at least once during their USD years in some kind of community service project.

For the volunteers, the reward can be as simple as making a connection or as dramatic as giving someone the tools to change his or her future. Sophomore Naomi McAuliffe, a Family Learning Center tutor, is increasing 10-year-old Rita's odds for a better future by giving her the tools for a better education (see story on page 3).

Students in all disciplines put their talents at the service of others. English majors help schoolchildren learn to love reading through the Southeast San Diego Tutoring Project. Law students provide counsel to local residents through the School of Law's Pro Bono Legal Advocates program. And some projects cut across disciplines, like the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance program, which deploys students in law, business and other subjects to help elderly and low-income tax filers.

USD employees heed the call to service as well. When Bob Brown, assistant director of public safety, goes out into the community, he often finds himself working side-by-side with colleagues from USD (see story on page 5).

"Altruism is present at every level of this university," Sister Furay says. "It's not just students, or faculty, or administrators. Our staff are heavily involved in their communities, taking on everything from Little League to health care to culture and the arts."

BOB BROWN

Taking Action

BOB BROWN AND HIS USD COLLEAGUES TAKE ON COMMUNITY ISSUES.

In the simplest terms, the world can be split into two groups of people: those who talk about getting involved and those who take action. Bob Brown takes action.

From mediating neighbor disputes to encouraging high school students to consider college, Brown gets involved, both on the job and off. "I feel it's something I should do and that I need to do because I'm part of this community," says Brown, assistant director of public safety.

That sense of commitment is one reason he was hired in 1992, says Don Johnson, director of public safety. With the department's evolving focus into community-based policing, they were looking for someone who had an interest in bettering the community by reaching out. In turn, Brown says, community involvement enables him to do a better job at USD because he stays informed of the issues in the community and he also meets people with ideas that he can share back at USD.

Brown is quick to point out that he is not the only person at USD taking action in the community. In fact, he explains, he frequently finds himself working side-by-side with USD colleagues, and many are more involved than he is. Often, all it takes is the mention of a project for colleagues to sign on, Brown says.

Brown is always ready to extend his hand as well. As a volunteer mediator for both the San Diego Mediation Center and the Center for Municipal Dispute Resolution, he is part of a system that is an alternative to the courts. On one memorable assignment, he drove to a public housing complex in San Ysidro, Calif., every Monday night for four months to mediate any disputes that had arisen between neighbors. "By the end of my assignment, I got to know the people in the area and they felt they could come talk to me about problems other than those needing mediation," he says. "I felt good about that."

His activities are far-reaching. Brown is a member of the Catfish Club, a group of community members and leaders who meet weekly at the Christ United Presbyterian Church in Logan Heights to discuss issues confronting San Diego. As part of the Coalition for Equality, Brown and other USD employees help organize community forums at which educators and students discuss issues that inhibit or obstruct the education process, issues such as racism.

Education is a particular interest for Brown, who is former chairman of the school board advisory committee, Poway Unified School District. On the steering committee for the United Negro College Fund, he says helping someone get an education benefits everyone in the community. He also encourages student groups from underrepresented areas of San Diego to visit USD, hopefully inspiring them to consider college by exposing them to a campus, perhaps for the first time.

"Education is the key to dealing with most of the problems we are encountering as a society," Brown says. "Education is a route to understanding each other."

Sometimes Brown kindles that understanding just by getting two people to talk, merely opening up the lines of communication. In the end, it's a simple philosophy that this public safety officer lives by: "Treat everyone the way you want to be treated yourself."

"When a faculty member communicates enthusiasm and dedication for his or her discipline, the students learn to love the discipline. Values are caught, not taught, and that includes intellectual values."

As an example, Sister Furay cites lead custodian Ted Geddes, who is active in the Down's Syndrome Association and recently was named chairman of the East County Community Advisory Committee for Special Education.

Geddes, the father of a 5-year-old boy with Down's syndrome, is working to have students with disabilities included in regular classrooms. "People with disabilities are no different from so-called 'typical' people," Geddes says. "They have the same wants and needs and desires."

Coming from an institution pervaded by community service, it is no wonder USD alumni often carry a sense of altruism into their professional lives. "If you work as a volunteer while you're a student, there is a very high probability that you will work as a volunteer after you graduate," says John Trifiletti, director of alumni relations.

To illustrate, Trifiletti cites Mary O'Connor '83 and Rich Yousko '87. "They both were resident assistants who were active in community service and campus ministry," he says. "Today, Mary is a pediatric dentist who spends one day a week at a nearby Indian reservation, and Rich is a representative of an outdoor equipment company who brings medical supplies to families in Mexico and Croatia."

THE GIFT OF PROFESSIONAL EXPERTISE

During the 1991 fall semester, an economist from the USD School of Business Administration told an audience at a Business Update Seminar about a system he had just developed for measuring the health of San Diego's economy by tracking such indicators as unemployment, tourism and building permits.

In the lively question-and-answer session that followed, one of the executives urged the economist, Alan Gin, to share his new tool with the local business community. Several weeks later, Gin released his first monthly USD Index of Leading Economic Indicators (see story on page 7).

Executives who attend seminars and series offered through the USD Continuing Education Division often walk away with invaluable tips. During the 1992-93 school year, more than 150 professionals participated in one or more of the following programs: the Business Update Seminars; the Certificate in International Business and Certificate in Direct Marketing; and the Family Business Institute, Southern California's first professional training center for family-owned businesses.

Continuing Education programs are just one example of how USD puts its resources to use in the professional arena. Practitioners of law, nursing, the arts, engineering, marine science and commerce can and do seek guidance from the university community.

"This institution has been blessed with very talented people, and we like to see their talents put to good use," Hughes says.

One of those people has been putting his talents to use on behalf of fledgling democracies. Bernard Siegan, distinguished professor of law, is advising Eastern European countries that are constructing new self-rule governments. His book, Drafting a Constitution for a Nation or Republic Emerging into Freedom, was recently translated and distributed to the Ukrainian Parliament.

ALAN GIN

Economic Indicator

ALAN GIN MEASURES THE HEALTH OF THE SAN DIEGO ECONOMY.

When Alan Gin talks, San Diego listens. That's because every month, Gin, assistant professor of economics and member of USD's Economic Research Group, publishes the USD Index of Leading Economic Indicators. Gin's index is the San Diego version of the national leading economic indicators index released each month by the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis.

Though the index has been reported widely in the San Diego media since its November 1991 debut and Gin is sought after as a speaker and an expert for interviews, his claims about the index's impact are modest: "I think the index has gotten people more interested in local economics," he says.

The San Diego LEI comprises six economic variables: building permits for new housing units, local stock prices, initial claims for unemployment insurance, help-wanted advertising in the San Diego Union-Tribune, tourism activities and the national LEI index.

Analyzing gains and losses for the six variables each month, Gin forecasts the short-term San Diego economy, then distributes the results to city, county and state government officials, and to members of the medical, real estate, financial and legal communities. His distribution list has grown more than sixfold from the original 30 subscribers and it continues to expand each month.

Not every university would welcome a research project that is designed solely for practical application in the community, Gin says, but USD was immediately supportive of the San Diego LEI. "Unfortunately, a lot of the research that's done is published in academic journals, is seen by other academicians and disappears," he says. "I think that for a university of our size, there's room for academic research, but there is also room for research that can be applied by the local community. That's where the index of leading economic indicators would fall."

Gin involves students in the data gathering, particularly the members of the economics club. This opportunity gives them valuable experience conducting research, he says.

In the future, Gin would like to help government and business leaders evaluate how changes they are considering will affect the local economy. "We will develop a more sophisticated model of the economy someday that will help us analyze events that occur in the community," he says. "It also could be used to analyze policies the city is considering adopting. We'd like to work more with local and state government officials in helping them develop the appropriate policies to get San Diego's economy going again."

"Little by little, our students bring these youngsters out of their shells. They start to feel at home on a college campus. They start to wonder if maybe someday they could go to a school like this."

How do you help a country write its constitution? Very judiciously, says Siegan. "I urge these new governments to give stronger constitutional protection to property rights, entrepreneurship and contracts," he says, "because I believe such protection gives nations the greatest hope for switching from a backward economy to a modern economy."

Not everyone at USD counsels heads of state. Some devote themselves to people who are largely unseen and unheeded. Bob Fellmeth, Price Professor of Public Interest Law, has worked for decades to uphold the rights of unorganized and underrepresented publics.

These days, Fellmeth is tackling a tough challenge: safeguarding the health and welfare of children. His Children's Advocacy Institute is taking on a range of issues — from deadbeat parents to lead paint poisoning — on behalf of young citizens who, as Fellmeth puts it, "fall to the bottom of the priority list because they can't vote and they can't afford lobbyists."

This year, CAI established the Child Advocacy Clinic with a grant from the U.S. Department of Education to give law students direct experience with children's issues (see story on page 9).

Migrant workers, another underrepresented group, are the focus of an ambitious health care program at the Philip Y. Hahn School of Nursing — a new migrant health care option in the family nurse practitioner track of the master of science in nursing program (see story on page 13).

Many USD scholars seek common-sense solutions to problems that have largely been ignored. Perri Bomar, a professor in the School of Nursing, is searching for new preventive health regimens for African-American women who suffer from hypertension and obesity.

Bomar, named a "1992 Bristol Myers Squibb Foundation Scholar" by the American Nurses Foundation, has found evidence that unique cultural and environmental barriers inhibit African-American women from changing their physical activity, choice of food and other lifestyle patterns. "This ANF-supported study will help us find out what those barriers are, and what nurses can do to help this underserved population overcome them," Bomar says.

When students work alongside professors like Bomar, or like biology professor Marie Simovich, who is now collaborating with the U.S. Navy to study vernal pools at Miramar Naval Air Station (see story on page 15), they pick up more than knowledge, says Sister Furay. "When a faculty member communicates enthusiasm and dedication for his or her discipline, the students learn to love that discipline," says the provost. "Values are caught, not taught, and that includes intellectual values."

THE GIFT OF MENTORING

Tom Iannacone has discovered over time that life in a collegiate sports program brings unexpected rewards.

Naturally, the USD athletic director and his teams enjoy winning, and of course, they take pride in the strong academic records of USD athletes, who

NIEVA VAN LEER

Advocating Change

STUDENTS IN THE SCHOOL OF LAW ARE TACKLING CHILDREN'S ISSUES THROUGH PUBLIC POLICY AND JUVENILE LAW.

By their very nature, some decisions in court are more important than others, says Robert C. Fellmeth, executive director of the Children's Advocacy Institute at USD's School of Law. A decision that results in a child being protected from molestation is one. A decision that allows a child to receive financial support so he or she is not hungry is another. In fact, much of juvenile law concerns decisions that may determine the course of a person's future, says Fellmeth, who is also USD's Price Professor of Public Interest Law. Yet, there is a critical need for competent advocates in this specialty.

The Child Advocacy Clinic was established in the 1993 fall semester to call attention to the field and to train skilled advocates. Operating through the Children's Advocacy Institute with a grant from the U.S. Department of Education, the clinic provides law students with direct legal experience in dependency court proceedings as well as in developing public policy relating to children. Ten students have signed up for a two-semester commitment — twice as long as most clinical courses — and Fellmeth expects the clinic to accommodate 16-20 students eventually. This first group of students is extraordinarily promising, he says, each with a remarkable background and commitment to the program.

"These students are working to leverage change for children across the whole spectrum of child issues — child care, health, safety, custody and abuse," he says. "And they are leveraging change with policy advocates. They are learning not just how to represent children, but potentially how to make a career being child advocates."

The advocates-in-training are enthusiastic about this prospect. "Working for children as an attorney, there's a deep caring, a type of bond with the client that makes you want to work and advocate, not just be their lawyer," says Nieva van Leer, a third-year law student who was a child in foster care for 11 years and went on to social work and child abuse investigations.

"In juvenile law, you're representing a class of people who really don't have their own voice," adds third-year law student Frances Quevedo.

In addition to taking the introductory course "Child Rights and Remedies," the students each work on a project with an attorney from CAI or from the Child Advocacy Division of the San Diego Public Defender's Office. Every project potentially results in legislative changes, regulatory changes or decisions in individual cases. The range of current projects is wide, from investigating procedures that would make eligible newborns automatically registered for Medi-Cal benefits to helping draft new rules governing the commitment of minors who are dependents or wards to psychiatric hospitals.

"The students are getting a combination of experience that is unique in lawyering," says Sharon Kalemkiarian, Children's Advocacy Clinic faculty member and supervising attorney of the clinic. "They are able to work on larger policy issues and also to experience in the trenches what's happening to children. Most attorneys can go their whole life and never experience both sides of that picture."

Van Leer sums up the experience simply: "This is exactly what I want to do when I grow up," she says. "I want to be a kid's lawyer."

"It was gratifying to see the high school competitors interacting with our college students and with the professional engineers who participated in the Walk On Water contest. They now see engineers as real-life problem-solvers."

rank second only to Stanford in graduation rates among West Coast Division I programs. But the Toreros never could have predicted the joy they would find in playing big brother and sister to young visitors.

"When schoolchildren come up here to attend ballgames as guests of our athletes, they seem a little overwhelmed at first," Iannacone says with a smile. "You can tell by the looks on their faces that they're thinking, 'How could there be so many friendly people taking an interest in me?'"

"But, little by little, our students bring these youngsters out of their shells," he adds. "They start to feel at home on a college campus. They start to wonder if maybe someday they could go to a school like this to play and learn like the older kids."

Many of USD's programs aimed at community or professional service attain another important goal: outreach to young people who need encouragement or direction.

The Linda Vista Kids Project, now in its third year, was launched after Hughes learned that 60 percent of neighborhood vandalism was the work of children age 10 or younger who had no after-school supervision. Three afternoons a week, undergraduates and schoolchildren play sports, do homework and engage in other constructive activities.

For those seeking guidance in choosing a career path, USD's professional schools offer targeted mentor programs such as the School of Law's annual "Multicultural Law Day," which brings 50 to 100 undergraduates and high school students to Warren Hall for mock law classes and mock trials.

Other programs augment guidance and encouragement with another important incentive: direct financial aid. At the Philip Y. Hahn School of Nursing, nurses of diverse cultures who want to take on a leadership role in the health care field can apply for Patricia Roberts Harris Fellowships to undertake full-time graduate nursing studies.

A similar venture at the School of Education is enabling African-American male college graduates to become credentialed as teachers (see story on page 17).

Students and faculty in the Department of Electrical Engineering have found an unusual way to pique the interest of nascent scientists. Last year, the department's annual Walk On Water contest added a category for high school students with the skills to design "buoyancy shoes" and the courage to pilot them across the surface of the Sports Center pool.

"It was gratifying to see the high school competitors interacting with our college students and with the professional engineers who participated," says Thomas Kanneman, director of the department. "Those young men and women and their parents came away from the contest with a new appreciation for the excitement of engineering. They now see engineers as real-life problem-solvers."

Real-life mentors can be found in abundance among the ranks of USD alumni. They include:

- ✦ Bertha Pendleton '89 (Ed.D.), champion of education reform. After 35 years as a teacher and administrator in the San Diego city school system, Pendleton was named this year as the system's first female and first African-American superintendent.
- ✦ Sandra Brue '66, an alumna of the College for Women, whose Sandicast sculptures are sold in over 40 countries around the world. Brue shares her entrepreneurial know-how through participation on the executive committee of USD's Corporate Associates program and the board of directors of the Private Industry Council.

A very special group of USD associates live out the values they received from a very special group of women. The Association of the Alumnae of the Sacred Heart (AASH) support the continuing work of the Religious of the Sacred Heart. This year, the AASH bestowed its "Cor Unum" award on USD's Sister Virginia McMonagle, RSCJ, for her outstanding work as an educator and a missionary.

THE GIFT OF ECONOMIC NOURISHMENT

Over the past 20 years, from his perch as dean of students, Tom Burke has watched a steady stream of students, parents and returning alumni arrive in San Diego for the sole purpose of visiting Alcalá Park.

When USD constituents come from around the country to spend time on campus, they invariably spend money off campus. During their stay in San Diego, they rent condominiums or lodge in hotels, they eat in restaurants, they shop at malls and they visit tourist attractions. In short, they help nourish the local economy.

"If we were to undertake a study of USD's impact on the economy outside the gates, I have no doubt we would find the university among the top 20 economic contributors," Burke says.

Such a study is now in progress. Andrew Narwold, assistant professor of economics, and his students at the School of Business Administration have been measuring the ways that USD contributes to the economic health of the region. Some of their early findings are:

- ✦ Approximately 6,000 students rent apartments or condominiums, buy groceries and clothing, have their cars fueled and fixed, and buy other goods and services from local merchants.
- ✦ More than 1,000 people are directly employed by USD, and scores of vendors are hired by university departments on a regular basis.
- ✦ Each summer, hundreds of people travel to San Diego to attend conferences and conventions at the USD campus. Some of those gatherings, like the 1991 General Chapter of the Franciscans of the Order of Friars Minor, draw widespread attention to the attractions of the San Diego area.

"If we were to undertake a study of USD's impact on the economy outside the gates, I have no doubt we would find the university among the top 20 economic contributors."

"As we reminded the City Council representatives, this campus was fully prepared to host one of the 1992 presidential debates."

- ✦ Three major USD annual events — Commencement Weekend, Family Weekend and Homecoming Weekend — draw throngs of out-of-town visitors to San Diego for a duration of two days or more.
- ✦ Many USD students contribute to the local economy either through part-time jobs or through unpaid internships.

Burke also has discovered that people who come to San Diego to visit USD sometimes stay a while and boost the economy in the long run. "Over the years, I have met people who fell in love with San Diego after their kids started attending USD, and who wound up starting businesses here or buying vacation homes here," he says.

THE GIFT OF PUBLIC ENLIGHTENMENT

When the San Diego City Council approached USD in September 1993 with a request to hold two special public hearings on campus, city officials were surprised by how quickly event planners lined up the Hahn University Center, arranged seating and refreshments for up to 400 citizens (and news crews), and recruited student volunteers as on-site helpers.

"We've had plenty of experience in setting up for large public forums," says Greg Zackowski, director of operations and special events. "As we reminded the City Council representatives, this campus was fully prepared to host one of the 1992 presidential debates."

Alcalá Park proudly serves as a regional center for public enlightenment through programs and activities that are open to all at little or no cost.

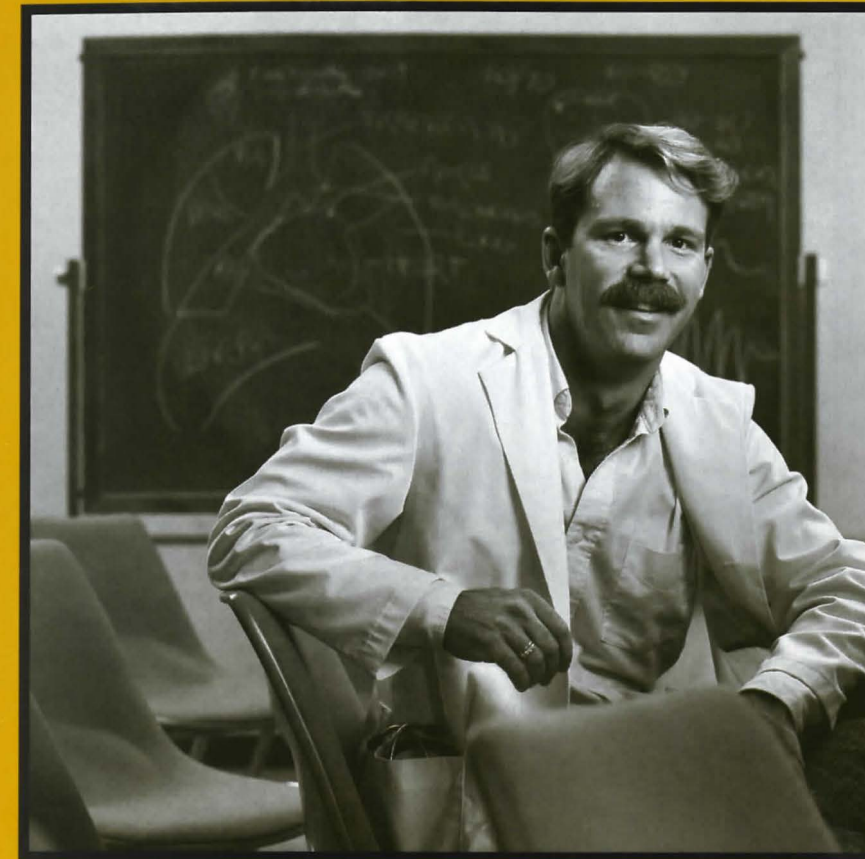

Three USD lecture series have given local audiences an opportunity to hear nationally renowned speakers:

- ✦ The Nathaniel L. Nathanson Memorial Lecture Series at the School of Law brought two U.S. Supreme Court justices to USD in two successive years: Sandra Day O'Connor in 1992 and Harry A. Blackmun in 1993.
- ✦ The Sharon Siegan Memorial Lecture Series at the School of Law most recently brought Milton Friedman, Nobel Memorial Prize laureate in economic science, to San Diego in 1991.
- ✦ The annual Philip Y. Hahn School of Nursing Lectureship has featured such distinguished nursing educators as Claire M. Fagin, the current interim president of the University of Pennsylvania.

And at the School of Education, each recipient of the DeForest L. Strunk Endowed Chair in Special Education typically caps his or her semester at USD with two free public lectures. Eleanor Guetzloe, the 1992-93 recipient, lectured on "Aggressiveness and Adolescents" and "Suicide and Adolescents."

Two of USD's greatest public resources are its libraries, the Helen K. and James S. Copley Library and the Katherine M. and George M. Pardee Jr. Legal Research Center. "People from all over the San Diego area use the Copley Library for its unique book collection," says university librarian Ed Starkey. "And the LRC is widely recognized as the strongest legal collection in the region."

SCOTT SHUFORD,
STUDENT IN THE MIGRANT HEALTH CARE OPTION

Care in the Field

SCHOOL OF NURSING STUDENTS ARE LEARNING HOW TO ADDRESS MIGRANT WORKERS' SPECIAL HEALTH CARE NEEDS.

When a migrant farmworker in Southern California becomes ill, getting help can be a complex prescription. Begin with language and cultural barriers that often complicate a simple visit to a clinic. Add to this the lack of decent low-cost housing and living conditions that are breeding grounds for health and social problems. Then multiply these concerns by the estimated 200,000 migrant workers who make up the labor pool for the region's agricultural industry. The result? A growing problem that desperately needs a solution. USD's Philip Y. Hahn School of Nursing is gearing up for the challenge. With a three-year contract awarded in 1992 by the Health Resources and Services Administration, the school has introduced a migrant health care option in the family nurse practitioner track of the master of science program.

The migrant health care option incorporates three main elements in preparing nurse practitioner students to care for this population, says Louise Rauckhorst, associate professor of nursing and director of the program.

First, students take "Migrant

Health Care: Sociocultural and Family Perspectives," a course in which they are introduced to the cultural and economic pressures the migrant population endures, as well as the realities the group faces living in migrant camps and seeking health care. Poor housing conditions, inadequate sanitation and ventilation, and the lack of a clean water supply contribute to a high risk for communicable diseases and other health problems.

Second, the students undertake supervised clinical experiences, both in the clinic setting and in outreach settings such as migrant camps, the hiring halls and the fields where they work. Students work with their instructors to develop a rapport with migrant workers and their families, take medical histories, perform the appropriate physical examinations, assess their health problems and decide on appropriate plans of action.

"Because of the conditions that many of these migrants are living under," Rauckhorst says, "it makes it very challenging to develop a realistic plan of care. They sometimes are lacking the very basics that we take for granted in the way of sanitation, transportation and the financial ability to even obtain medication."

The third element in the migrant health care option is Spanish language fluency, particularly the ability to communicate with migrant workers and their families about health matters. The program is designed to help every student improve his or her Spanish fluency, from a student with no knowledge of Spanish to one who already has some level of fluency.

By providing a comprehensive program of instruction and support, the school hopes to increase the ranks of nurse practitioners choosing migrant health care as a career. "There are a lot of challenges encountered in trying to provide follow-up care to the migrant population," Rauckhorst explains. "It will help to have knowledgeable nurse practitioners out there who understand all of the ramifications, obstacles and barriers to providing necessary access, and adequate and continuous care."

"At any given time on campus, an art exhibition is on display in Founders Gallery, the USD Symphony is tuning up for a concert in Shiley Theatre, the USD Choral Scholars are preparing for a noontime French Parlor recital, and actors in the undergraduate theater arts program are rehearsing a new one-act play in the theater in Sacred Heart Hall."

Another big draw at Alcalá Park is USD's thriving arts and culture scene. At any given time on campus, an art exhibition is on display in Founders Gallery, the USD Symphony is tuning up for a concert in Shiley Theatre, the USD Choral Scholars are preparing for a noontime French Parlor recital, and actors in the undergraduate theater arts program are rehearsing a new one-act play in the theater in Sacred Heart Hall.

Two ongoing arts programs have won special acclaim from critics and audiences. The master of fine arts in dramatic arts program, operated jointly by USD and the Old Globe Theatre, is one of only 10 programs in the nation that give young actors classical training and professional experience. And Nota Bene, a new San Diego professional ensemble that performs Medieval, Renaissance and Baroque music on period instruments, has found a home in the acoustically perfect Founders Chapel.

Those who associate USD with young people might be surprised to find how many lifelong learners take advantage of the university's educational offerings. The University of the Third Age, now in its 15th year, is a three-week lecture series for older adults held each January and July on the USD campus.

Not all learning programs take place on campus. The Invisible University, also in its 15th year, offers free educational seminars by USD professors in community settings. There are no books, no grades and no attendance records — just a meeting of the minds between people who want to keep growing and discovering.

THE GIFT OF CULTURAL DIVERSITY

In 1991, when USD employees were asked for ways to improve communication between people of diverse cultures, they responded with a common-sense solution: Offer Spanish language instruction for English-speaking employees who want to be bilingual. Within a few months, the human resources department organized a low-cost introductory Spanish program, and the classes filled up quickly.

New interest in new languages is just one small manifestation of "Institutionalizing Cultural Diversity," a four-year, campus-wide $1.6 million project made possible by a $1 million grant from The James Irvine Foundation.

The Irvine Project has enabled USD to uphold one of its bedrock values: respect for the dignity of every human being. The project also means that USD graduates will leave Alcalá Park ready to contribute to an increasingly diverse world.

"Cultural diversity is not an add-on here — it cuts to the heart of the nature of this institution," Sister Furay says. "Here in Southern California, we're seeing larger and larger numbers of culturally diverse people. We want to educate generations of students, and also raise awareness among our employees, about the importance of that diversity."

As a regional leader in Catholic higher education, USD is compelled to recognize and serve a new pluralism. But exactly how does an institution achieve pluralism? The Irvine Project provides a blueprint for incorporating multiculturalism into the life of an institution.

WENDY WERNER AND STACIE HATHAWAY,
TWO MEMBERS OF SIMOVICH'S TEAM

Stewards of the Environment

MARIE SIMOVICH AND HER STUDENTS ARE
HELPING THE U.S. NAVY
PRESERVE FRAGILE
VERNAL POOL HABITATS.

San Diego has lost 97 percent of its vernal pools, the depressions on coastal mesas that fill with water in the late winter and early spring. Of the sparse collection of pools remaining, 80 percent are at Miramar Naval Air Station, home of the famed "Top Gun" squadron. The U.S. Navy is determined to help these pools survive and USD's Marie Simovich is on the front lines to help.

"The pools are very important, not just because they are wetlands," says Simovich, associate professor of biology, "but they are important food sources for other animals like amphibians and migratory birds, such as shore birds and ducks. Saving them is essentially mandated by the federal government, both from the perspective of saving wetlands and from the perspective that there are several endangered species involved."

With a grant from the Navy, Simovich and Rick Gonzalez, USD assistant professor of biology, are working with eight students to survey the vernal pool fauna. A number of plants and animals have adapted specifically to the vernal pools, surviving much of the year in a dehydrated, dormant state while the pools are dry and going through an entire life cycle in the short time that the pools hold water. As vernal pools disappear, the plants and animals that thrive within these ecosystems are becoming endangered. The group's findings will guide the Navy in the proper management of these fragile habitats.

"If we are going to save what's left of the vernal pools, we have to save the entire system," explains Simovich, who also is a member of the mayor's wetlands advisory board and a fellow of the natural history museum. "Just saving one little piece or one little organism is not going to do it. The whole thing can collapse if we don't have an understanding of the whole system to try to preserve it."

While surveying the complex system of vernal pool fauna, Simovich and the USD group are studying two crustaceans within her specialty — the Riverside Fairy Shrimp, which has been listed as an endangered species, and the San Diego Fairy Shrimp, which is being considered for listing.

The students are learning some important lessons, Simovich says. Not only are they learning how to be good stewards of the environment, but they are seeing firsthand how research can contribute to saving the environment.

Getting students involved in the research also is a great way to introduce them to the mainstream scientific community, Simovich adds. In fact, six of the students working on the Miramar project worked on another project last winter at Edwards Air Force Base. In December, they are presenting portions of their work on the Edwards AFB project at the annual meeting of the American Society of Zoologists, a prestigious conference with an international draw.

And, if all goes as planned with the year-long Miramar study, the students will have valuable research to present at next year's conference as well.

"The Irvine Project has enabled USD to uphold one of its bedrock values: respect for the dignity of every human being. The project also means that USD graduates will leave Alcalá Park ready to contribute to an increasingly diverse world."

The project's areas of emphasis are:

- ✦ An assessment component, completed last year, to gauge the campus climate and provide a sense of what needs to be done;
- ✦ A student affairs component that promotes diversity through student orientation sessions, human relations workshops, guest speakers and greater interaction with minority students from San Diego City College;
- ✦ A faculty development/curriculum development component which encourages research and teaching projects that focus on diversity;
- ✦ An administrator/staff development component that promotes diversity through workshops and organized discussions;
- ✦ Volunteer resources programs aimed at serving people from diverse cultures and underserved populations; and
- ✦ A community advisory board to solicit input from diverse citizens outside the campus.

The Irvine Project reached a milestone on Sept. 14 when two campus town forums were held to give the entire USD community a venue for discussing diversity. In his opening remarks, Hughes made it clear that cultural diversity at USD is more than just rhetoric.

"I want to start by dispelling the notion that the Irvine Project is about political correctness, or tokenism, or quotas, or redressing past wrongs," Hughes said. "We need to diversify this institution because a university must reflect the real world, and the world outside these gates is a culturally diverse world. Our students and our employees would be badly served if USD were a stale, narrow, homogeneous community.

"If, on the other hand, USD evolves into a campus enriched by people of diverse backgrounds — different races, different ethnicities and different cultures — we all will gain in knowledge and in life experience."

THE GIFT OF SPIRITUAL MINISTRY

At the beginning of his first full school year as USD's vice president for mission and ministry, Rev. Monsignor I. Brent Eagen invited an adjunct professor of religious studies to attend the annual Mass of the Holy Spirit as his guest of honor. When faculty and students arrived at the Immaculata to celebrate the Mass, they found Rabbi Wayne Dosick sitting in the first seat in the first pew.

"Monsignor Eagen stood at the altar and said to the congregation, 'Because we pray with many voices, which is really the same voice, we welcome our colleague and fellow minister,'" Rabbi Dosick recalls. "That was a very special moment. It spoke volumes about the spirituality and inclusiveness of this institution."

As a Roman Catholic institution, USD is committed to promoting Christian values as expressed by the Catholic Church. At the same time, the university welcomes people of all faiths to engage in a continuing search for meaning in contemporary life. To that end, USD has become a place where students of all

Opportunity Knocks

AFRICAN-AMERICAN MALE TEACHERS ARE UNDERREPRESENTED IN SECONDARY SCHOOLS. A NEW USD PROGRAM IS WORKING TO CHANGE THAT.

Few would be surprised to know that male teachers are underrepresented in elementary, junior high and high schools. Or that African-American male teachers are even more rare. In fact, the latter figure falls somewhere around 2 percent of all teachers in California, says Bob Infantino, USD professor of graduate, secondary and special education.

But knowing that the problem exists is not the same as doing something about it. The Secondary School Teaching Credential Program at USD was set up to begin changing the statistics. Through the program, USD annually recruits five African-American males with bachelor degrees who will follow a prescribed course of study leading toward a California single-subject teaching credential for secondary education. Funded for three years by a grant from The James Irvine Foundation, the program pays full tuition as well as a stipend during student teaching. "We support them for 30 semester units of work," says Infantino, who is also the program director.

As word spreads about the program, interest has been increasing. This year — the second year of the program — the number of applicants more than doubled to 15 for the five available slots. All are men who would not have been able to move into education without the help of this program, Infantino says.

For the applicants, the program represents more than a career opportunity; it represents an opportunity to contribute to their community. "In a lot of the conversations that I've had with the students, they say that they want to make a difference in their community," Infantino explains. "They say, 'I've lived there all my life. I want to contribute.'"

One such student is Tony Young, a former government employee and one of the program's first graduates. He was drawn to the opportunity to give something back to his community through his profession and to the personal nature of the work. "In teaching, there is nothing between you and the person you are trying to help except your imagination and your skills," he says. "You talk to the kids, you get the benefit of helping someone closely and you see the results."

As we near the turn of the century, teachers such as Young will be even more critical for the state of California, Infantino says. "There's a thrust at the state credential commission and the state education department to begin to have more teachers who come from ethnic backgrounds similar to the pupils they are teaching. California's Caucasian student population is continuing to decline. By the end of this decade, Caucasian students will no longer be the majority. They are not the majority in San Diego or Los Angeles city schools already."

Two graduates of the Secondary School Teaching Credential Program are teaching in San Diego schools now, and Infantino expects that number to grow this year and next, before the funding ends. USD is determined to continue the program — perhaps on a smaller scale — when that happens, but for now, the School of Education is celebrating its success stories.

"Monsignor Eagen stood at the altar and said to the congregation, 'Because we pray with many voices, which is really the same voice, we welcome our colleague and fellow minister, Rabbi Wayne Dosick.' That was a very special moment. It spoke volumes about the spirituality and inclusiveness of this institution."

creeds can explore their faiths. All undergraduates are required to take religious studies and philosophy courses. Their choices include Hindu, Jewish, Buddhist and Islamic studies, as well as Catholic theology and Biblical studies.

"When we go out into the world, we come across people of various religious traditions, and we need to know how to show them respect by relating to their traditions," Monsignor Eagen says. "So we've created a campus environment where Catholicity coexists with a spirit of ecumenism."

Because USD has long been supportive of diversity in the curricula, USD theologians are at the forefront of the young field of Latino theology, and Alcalá Park now serves as the editorial base for the new Journal of Hispanic/Latino Theology through faculty member and editor Orlando Espin (see story on page 19).

Pastoral care to the USD community is largely carried out by the Department of Campus Ministry, which offers programs that foster spiritual enrichment through worship and service. Pastoral care to the community outside the campus gates is centered in the university's Institute for Christian Ministries, a regional center for quality educational and ministerial services. While most ICM courses focus on aspects of Christian pastoral care, some, like the "AIDS Ministry" program, are designed for clergy and caregivers of all denominations.

At the same time it serves as a center for scholarship in all traditions, USD has become a place where people of all faiths can worship and pray. Daily Mass in the Immaculata and in Founders Chapel has long been a fixture at Alcalá Park, but in recent years, other spiritual celebrations, such as the ancient Tibetan rites performed by the monks of the Gyutu Tantric Choir, have inspired the campus community.

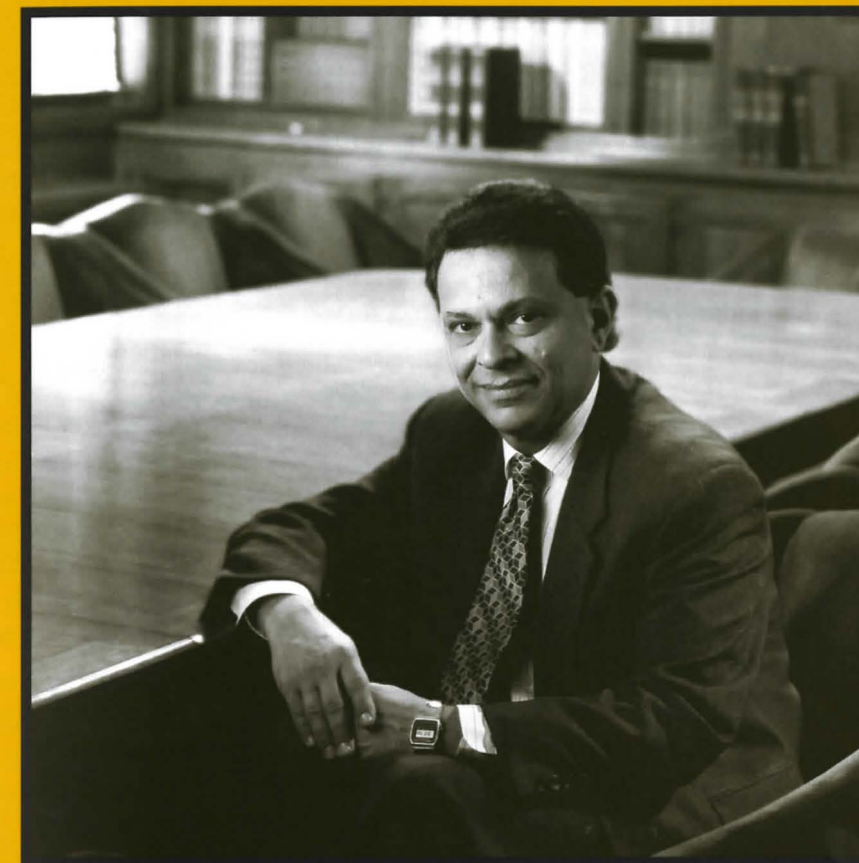

Monsignor Eagen believes that the true test of spirituality at USD lies in the level of commitment the entire campus has to serving others. "When I see our students building houses in Tijuana or working in Catholic Worker soup kitchens in San Diego, I am reminded that the Catholic church is a serving church headed by a pontiff who calls himself 'the servant of the servants of God,'" Monsignor Eagen says. "That's why, at the end of every Mass that I celebrate on campus, I tell the congregation, 'Go in peace to love and serve our Lord by loving and serving one another.'"

GIVING BACK TO THE COMMUNITY

In his 22 years as one of San Diego's most respected leaders, Art Hughes has watched the University of San Diego and the region outside its gates grow and evolve along parallel lines. He has taken special pride in the dynamic relationship between the campus and the community and in the way each has nurtured the other.

"We have truly been blessed with an extraordinary and sustained level of outside leadership and support," he says. "I cannot imagine a better place to carry out a mission of quality private higher education, and I cannot imagine carrying out that mission without the many friends we have made in the community."

ORLANDO ESPIN

Defining the Field

A NEW ACADEMIC JOURNAL MAKES ITS EDITORIAL HOME AT USD.

The Journal of Hispanic/Latino Theology has a mission. It is the first academic journal of theology with Hispanic/Latino contents in a field of study that is just now gaining prominence. In a sense, it will be one component defining the young field of Latino religion.

"Our goal is to make it one of the most respected academic journals in the field of Latino studies," says Orlando Espin, editor of the journal and USD associate professor of theological and religious studies. "We are going for very serious scholarship."

This is not a magazine for the general public. It is a professional journal for specialists in the field of theology.

It's a large assignment, but Espin says he and his colleagues are prepared. The quarterly journal, which made its debut during the 1993 fall semester, is published by the Academy of Catholic Hispanic Theologians of the United States, of which Espin is a former president. With a grant from the Lilly Endowment, ACHTUS contracted a publishing house to handle all of the administrative and production details while Espin directs the editorial details from USD.

It's appropriate that the editorial base of the journal is at USD, Espin says, for two reasons: The university is home to some of the few specialists in Latino religion nationwide and USD has long been supportive of this field of study. In the United States, the study of Latino religion has not enjoyed much prominence to date while demographics, such as in U.S. Catholicism, have been changing. Conservative predictions are that by the end of the century, or a mere seven years from now, 50 percent of all Catholics in the United States will be Latino. Considering this, Espin explains, anyone studying or teaching Latino religion now will have a strong influence on the entire field.

USD is one of the few universities at the forefront of the field. "We have one of the best undergraduate departments of theology in the nation and, within that, the prominence given to Latino theology is very clear," he says. "We are the only university in the nation to have courses on Latino theology and Latino Catholicism as part of its official curriculum."

USD's department of theological and religious studies includes two current or former presidents of ACHTUS — Espin and Maria Pilar Aquino. They and the other faculty members are recruited frequently for speaking engagements at the local, national and international level. Add to that the volumes of research published by the faculty as well as the editorial work on the new Journal of Hispanic/Latino Theology, and the evidence is unmistakable.

"From an academic point of view, USD certainly has a lot of weight in Latino religion and Latino studies," Espin says.

As for the Journal of Hispanic/Latino Theology, indications are that there has been an audience waiting for this academic publication. Within two or three months of advertising that the journal will be published, Espin says they achieved their subscription goals for the first year. The real test will be to sustain 2,000 subscribers after the three-year point, an average level for an academic journal. With the quality of work that Espin has seen in preparing the first three issues, he is confident that the journal will not only survive, but thrive.

Spotlight on 1993: The Year in Review

January-March

Elderly and low-income San Diegans who needed help filing their 1992 income tax forms were able to turn to the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program at USD, which was staffed by students from the School of Law, the School of Business Administration and other departments.

Malikah Shabazz, the youngest daughter of Malcolm X, addressed a USD audience in February on "The Legacy of Malcolm X."

Eleanor Guetzloe, the 1992-93 recipient of USD's DeForest L. Strunk Endowed Chair in Special Education, discussed "Aggressiveness and Adolescents" and "Suicide and Adolescents" in free public lectures at Alcalá Park.

The Philip Y. Hahn School of Nursing and Zeta Mu Chapter, Sigma Theta Tau, sponsored a free public lecture, "The Politics of Pain Management: The Role of Clinical Practice Guidelines." The lecture focused on new federal guidelines to help direct health care practitioners in the effective management of acute pain.

The Torero women's basketball team took the 1993 West Coast Conference Championship in March, shattering conference coaches' preseason predictions that USD would finish eighth out of eight teams.

April-June

Daniel W. Derbes, president of Signal Ventures, was elected chairman of the USD board of trustees and Joanne C. Warren, longtime San Diego civic leader and philanthropist, was elected vice chairman. Derbes has been a USD trustee since 1981 and vice chairman of the board since 1990. Warren, a trustee since 1986, was chairman of the executive committee of USD's successful Education for a New Age capital campaign.

Chong Wan Kim, AIA, a renowned architect and urban planner, was named a member of the USD board of trustees. Kim is president of C.W. Kim Architects & Planners, Inc.

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Harry A. Blackmun delivered the ninth annual Nathaniel L. Nathanson Memorial Lecture on April 7 at Shiley Theatre. Blackmun, the oldest member of the Supreme Court, discussed changes in the court and in the political arena.

The Fletcher Jones Foundation awarded $1.5 million to USD to endow and establish the Fletcher Jones Chair in Biology, the university's first endowed chair in the sciences. USD will fill the chair with a teacher-scholar in developmental biology.

Irene Palmer, dean emeritus of the Philip Y. Hahn School of Nursing, appeared on "Nursing Approach," a cable television show for nurses. Every Sunday in May, the show included a segment on Florence Nightingale produced by and starring Palmer, a national authority on Nightingale.

A group of USD graduate students in the School of Business Administration brought home the first-place trophy this spring from the 1993 International Collegiate Business Policy Competition. For the competition, each team made up to 65 decisions over a 10-week period covering every aspect of business.

Mark J. Riedy, former president of the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae), was selected as the first holder of the Ernest W. Hahn Chair of Real Estate Finance in USD's School of Business Administration. Riedy assumed the post in September, coming to USD from the National Council of Community Bankers.

During the 1992-93 school year, four USD student-athletes earned NCAA All-America honors: Charles "Chugger" Adair, soccer; Julie McKeon, women's tennis; Laura Richards, women's tennis; and Robert Ray, football.

Lt. Gen. Robert B. Johnston, USMC, addressed the undergraduate commencement ceremony on May 23. Johnston was commander of Operation Restore Hope in Somalia. Speaking at the graduate commencement ceremony earlier in the day was Rhetaugh Graves Dumas, dean of the University of Michigan School of Nursing. Morris Dees Jr., co-founder of the Southern Poverty Law Center, was the speaker for the School of Law commencement on May 22.

When Pope John Paul II visited Denver in August for World Youth Day, an estimated 200,000 young people were on hand, 17 of whom came from USD to join the international celebration of spirituality and youth.

USD's football Toreros began their first season at the Division I-AA level as a member of the Pioneer Football League.

C. Hugh Friedman, USD professor of law, was named by President Clinton to the White House Conference on Small Business Commission. The commission is responsible for developing recommendations for executive and legislative action to encourage the economic viability of small business.

For the fifth consecutive year, USD was named in the annual rankings of top universities and colleges compiled by U.S. News & World Report. In the magazine's "1994 America's Best Colleges," USD was ranked third among regional colleges and universities in the West.

Elizabeth Cobbs, associate professor of history, was selected as a Woodrow Wilson Scholar, one of 30 chosen worldwide, and is spending the 1993 fall semester at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C., to work on a book about the Peace Corps.

The USD board of trustees welcomed three new members: Robert H. Baker, president of Bob Baker Enterprises, Inc.; Sister Barbara Dawson, RSCJ, the newly named provincial for the Religious of the Sacred Heart in the United States; and John A. McMahon, executive vice president and managing principal of Johnson & Higgins of California.

Homecoming 1993 in November attracted more than 1,000 alumni and their families to Alcalá Park for three days of reunions and activities. Angel Kleinbub '59 received the third annual Mother Rosalie Hill Award.

It is with great appreciation that we acknowledge all of our generous friends who have seen fit to support the University of San Diego in these very difficult economic times. This shows the level of commitment that exists for the mission of USD, and those of us who are entrusted with carrying out that mission take your support and encouragement very seriously.

Your financial support comes at a time when financial aid is at a critical point — more and more students are vying for the same federal and state financial aid dollars. USD remains committed to assisting these qualified students and enabling them to successfully complete their education.

However, giving to the University of San Diego covers much more than scholarship support. USD donors support a myriad of programs — from faculty endowment to athletics, from business programs to music. These purposes draw together to create the vibrant center of higher education that USD has become.

It seems particularly appropriate this year that we combine the Honor Roll of Donors with the President's Report. Not only can we conserve economies, but at the same time help explain what our donors are investing in. It is good and right that each donor listed in this report be proud of what you are helping to make possible at USD.

Our heartfelt thanks go out to each and every one of you.

At the annual scholarship luncheon, the university recognizes donors of class scholarships as well as privately endowed and corporate-sponsored scholarships. Importantly, the luncheon provides a forum for scholarship donors and recipients to get to know one another.

TORERO ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION

A year ago, the USD athletic department began forming the Torero Athletic Association. Since then, the department has worked closely with many volunteer leaders to establish a board, adopt bylaws and finalize a five-year, long-range plan.

The mission of the Torero Athletic Association is to promote and support intercollegiate athletics at the University of San Diego through a single organization that represents all sports. The long-range plan includes programs, events and communication pieces that will help accomplish this mission. Some of these are: the Sport Captain program to increase communication between alumni; a hall of fame; a Homecoming brunch to bring together alumni athletes with the current coaches; and increased exposure in alumni publications.

The USD athletic department deeply appreciates the commitment by the Torero Athletic Association board of directors and all of the volunteers who are assisting on the association's committees.

Larger graduating classes mean USD's alumni ranks are growing stronger each year — 65 percent of USD's undergraduate alumni have graduated since 1980. With more students in each new class, there also is a growing need for scholarship and financial aid support.
