ART

What's In The Names?Castelli Paces
Art Offerings

By RICHARD REILLY

Art Critic, The San Diego Union

Castelli, Hassam, Janon, Lestrade and Rhodes is not a vaudeville act, a psychiatric clinic or a group of attorneys, but rather a few of the current local art exhibitions.

Castelli is Leo, the highly successful New York art dealer who grasped way back in the late 1950s the vitality and importance of modern art — light years ahead of every other gallery owner. Castelli had a knack for not only discovering artists who were creating new art but also those who went on to set trends and become legends.

On view at the La Jolla Museum of Contemporary Art is "Castelli and his artists/25 years," contains early works by Castelli's discoveries, the most well-known being Richard Artschwager, Dan Flavin, Jasper Johns, Donald Judd, Ellsworth Kelly, Roy Lichtenstein, Robert Morris, Bruce Nauman, Claes Oldenburg, Robert Rauschenberg, James Rosenquist, Edward Ruscha, Richard Serra, Frank Stella, Cy Twombly and Andy Warhol. Other Castelli artists included are Robert Barry, Lee Bontecou, John Chamberlain, Nassos Daphnis, Hanne Darboven, Jan Dibbets, Laura Grisi, Douglas Heubler, Joseph Kosuth, David Salle, Salvatore Scarpitta, Julian Schnable, Keith Sonnier, Paul Waldman, Lawrence Weiner and Mia Westerlund.

This exhibition, conceived and organized by the Aspen Center for the Visual Arts, opened at the La Jolla Museum as the first stop in a national tour. It has been widely publicized and is accompanied by an informative catalogue, which contains Calvin Tomkins' brilliant New Yorker profile on Castelli, an interview with Castelli, brief biographical sketches of and statements by the artists as well as many black-and-white photographs of their work.

Potential viewers should understand that the works exhibited are from Castelli's artists' very first exhibitions

Potential viewers should understand that the works exhibited are from Castelli's artists' very first exhibitions — they are neither the most significant nor even the most representative; what you'll see are works that said something to Castelli when he first saw them. Once one stops looking for "famous" works by these name artists (the most distinguished work is Jasper Johns' "Flag on Orange Field II") and focuses instead on Castelli's knack of recognizing "what was coming" and on his willingness to show works that were not related to anything that had ever been done before, this show is a lot easier to accept.

Nevertheless, it is regrettable that the works exhibited do not provide the excitement, insatiable curiosity and astonishingly wide range of Castelli's artists.

The museum also is exhibiting fashion designer Zandra Rhodes' limited-edition posters and lithographs, watercolors, textile prints on paper and 13 gowns.

Both shows remain up through June 6.

The La Jolla Museum of Contemporary Art, 700 Prospect St., is open 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Tuesday through Friday and 12:30 to 5 p.m. weekends.

Translating the effects of sunlight and shadow into black and white is a Herculean task — ask any graphics artist. Childe Hassam (1859-1935), who was the most flamboyant of the American impressionists, employing the strongest, brightest colors, also had a predilection for lithographs and etchings, constantly experimenting, creating strongly contrasting tones of black and white. To see how well he succeeded, head for the Founders' Gallery, University of San Diego.

The San Diego Museum of Art's director, Steve Brezzo, and Martin Petersen, the museum's curator of paintings, lent Professor Theresa Whitcomb's art class 31 of Hassam's graphics. Donated to the museum in 1940 by Hassam's widow, stored carefully, used for curatorial research, but never exhibited because there was no explained, some Barbara' is among the Childe Hassam lithographs, lithotints and etchings on exhibit at Founders Gallery, University of San Diego. The work measures 7 inches by 9 inches.

natory data as to correct titles, dates and identities; eight of Whitcomb's students, as a learning tool in their art history seminar, undertook the enormous task of uncovering all that missing data — and did! The class researched every publication on Hassam available and in a period of six weeks accomplished what Petersen said should have taken three years.

The students, Michele Burgess, Kathleen Henwood, Maryann Luera, Robert O'Connell, Garrett Sanderson III, Lisa Smith, Genevieve Sousa and Joel Sweimler, all art history minors and English majors, wrote the catalogue and read every monograph on Hassam, designed and installed the installation, deduced certain facts, and are now thinking of setting up a detective agency.

Was all the work worthwhile and is the exhibition a good one? Absolutely. Exhibited are etchings, lithographs and lithotints, dating from 1898 through 1933. Views of Paris, Point Loma and Portsmouth, winter in Central Park, summer in East Hampton, Santa Barbara's plaza and New York's St. Thomas Church, several figure studies, some of them nudes, a French cruiser, harbors and an unusual study of Joseph Pennell are up for your scrutiny.

Hassam's emphasis on structure and his compelling patterns of small strokes give his lithotints the feeling of original drawings. Although variations and improvisations are indulged in, each print was obviously treated as an individual work, and some of Hassam's most daring compositions were achieved on plates no more than 10 inches high.

Hassam was a frugal New Englander, and it is amusing to note he printed many of his images on fine-grained end papers — removed from books, including the Bible, to which he seemed especially partial.

Founders' Gallery, University of San Diego, Alcalá Park, is open weekdays from noon to 5 p.m.; Wednesdays noon to 9 p.m.

Watercolorist Jack Lestrade is having a successful show at the Huney Gallery; 19 out of 41 pictures were sold within five days of the opening, with numerous holds on many others. A tour of his work — sunny views of Portugal, Spain and the southwest part of France, patches of sunshine and shadow, cobblestone streets, whitewashed houses with tiled roofs, horses walked by children, donkeys tethered to trees, rusty, weed-covered farm equipment, rambling roses, potted geraniums and violets, picturesque windmills, fishing boats and other subjects of the same kind — are brilliantly executed.

The A. Huney Gallery, 3746 Sixth Ave., San Diego, is open Wednesday through Sunday, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Linda Janon's exhibitions, "Dancers and Other Creatures," is being featured at the Spectrum Gallery. Janon, who majored in textile design at the Fashion Institute of Technology, also studied drawing at Dartmouth College and, at one time, seriously trained as a dancer. In her statement affixed to the gallery wall, Janon quotes Violette Verdy's "somewhere between mythology and nature, the unicorn and the centaur were born ... and the dancer."

Because of her background, many of Janon's works are dance oriented: Stravinsky's Firebird Suite, in which costumed dancers are captured in rhythmic variations, sometimes in the exaggerated stances required by choreographers. Some of this series have melody and harmony, others a thumpy percussion. One of Janon's most skillful works, "Homage to Jerome Robbins/Afternoon of the Faun," shows a superb color sense as well as a degree of passion.

This exhibition also includes several clever, charmingly erotic pictures, among them "Pathos and Blue Dot" and "Erotica In 3s With Flower," and will remind viewers of certain Japanese prints. Janon's works, executed essentially in colored pencil and gouache, have a certain lusty, lyrical effusion mixed with creative virtuosity but will not be everybody's cup of tea.

Spectrum Gallery, 726 Seventh Ave., San Diego, is open Tuesday through Saturday, 11 to 5:30.

International law program set

The School of Law of the University of San Diego will be offering its 1982 Institutes of International and Comparative Law in England, Mexico, France, Russia, and Poland. The programs are designed to introduce American law students to foreign law and legal institutions.

"Classes abroad," said Sheldon Krantz, dean of the School, "sensitize students to the cultural differences that influence effective international dealing and introduce them to the viewpoints of foreign experts."

The Guadalajara program, which runs June 29 through Aug. 4, will focus on civil liberties, immigration law, and law and development. Students attending the London Institute, held at King's College, will study Comparative Corporations, Comparative Labor Law, Government Liability, and other course topics. At Oxford's Magdalen College, a program running from July 4 through Aug. 7 will treat subjects such as alternative energy law, public international law, and international human rights. A similar session will be held July 4 through Aug. 7 in Paris. Socialist Law and East-West Trade Law are offered in the Russia-Poland institute, June 6 through July 3.

All courses are taught in English by the faculties of the institutes, which include professors from Georgetown University, Columbia University, SMU, King's College, the University of Pennsylvania, Duke, New York University, and Loyola as well as USD.

A brochure detailing the programs is available by writing the Institutes of International and Comparative Law, University of San Diego Law School, Alcalá Park, San Diego 92110, or by phoning 293-4597.

San Diegan named to U.S. advisory post

Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — Steve Wittman, an unsuccessful candidate for San Diego City Council in 1979, has been named by President Reagan to the last eight months of a term on the National Advisory Committee for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention.

The 15-person committee meets four times a year to review and evaluate federal policies toward juvenile justice.

The president yesterday also selected Charles B. "Bud" Wilkinson, 66, board chairman of the Public Employees Benefit Services Corp. in St. Louis, Mo., and a former University of Oklahoma football coach, to head the committee. In all, Reagan named nine men — mostly judges and lawyers — to the advisory panel.

Wittman, 35, a Republican lawyer, is assistant director of programs for the Center for Criminal Justice Policy and Management at the University of San Diego School of Law.

A White House spokesman said Wittman was selected in part because he is a member and organizer of the San Diego County Child Abuse Coordinating Council.

He will replace an appointee of former President Jimmy Carter and will serve until Jan. 17.

Members are paid only for the days the committee meets.

8,000 grads flip their tassels

By Hugh Grambau

Tribune Staff Writer

In ceremonies that ranged from raucous to sedate, more than 8,000 college students received degrees in San Diego yesterday.

At California Western School of Law, more than 200 graduates listened to U.S. Attorney General William French Smith challenge them to improve their profession and rap the press, then watched him hand a diploma to his son, Scott.

Meanwhile, nearly 7,000 graduates at San Diego State University heard author Dr. John Gardner exhort them to rock the boat in life.

The ceremony was festive, as graduates celebrated throughout the commencement.

At University of San Diego more than 600 grads listened to Mexico's new Ambassador to the United States describe the conflicting perspectives and the potential for cooperation between the two countries and 260 USD Law School grads heard Robert B. McKay, retired dean of the New York University School of Law.

Attorney General Smith told the grads that a new attorney can't possibly know what's in store.

"A new lawyer, no matter how well trained, can never know what lies ahead," said Smith, a Harvard Law School graduate, appointed to head the Justice Department by President Reagan at the beginning of his term.

"You are entering what has become perhaps this nation's growth profession," he said, noting that there are more lawyers in the nation than steel workers. "You enter the profession at the crest of a great wave that has swept law and the courts into every aspect of American life."

But, Smith cautioned, lawyers have historically been mistrusted by the public and the grads' greatest challenge "is the responsibility to improve the system of justice in the future."

In public opinion surveys, lawyers as a group receive lower confidence ratings than Congress, the press and trade unions, he said. "That's doing pretty badly."

The attorney general said that after 1½ years in Washington he had developed a new law of media accuracy.

"Everything you read in the papers is absolutely true, except that rare story of which you have direct knowledge," he said, citing contradictory descriptions of his performance and actions.

At USD, McKay and USD Professor Kenneth C. Davis received honorary juris doctor degrees, joining Sepulveda and Helen K. Copley, publisher of The Tribune and The San Diego Union and chairman and chief executive officer of Copley Press Inc., who received honorary doctorates in humane letters from the university.

Mrs. Copley is vice chairman of the Board of Trustees of the University of San Diego and was cited for her contributions to the university, the community of San Diego, and to journalism. She is director of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, vice chairman of the American Newspaper Publishers Association Foundation, and trustee of Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation.

LIKELY TO CONTINUE

U.S. relations with Mexico called 'fine'

By Hugh Grambau

Tribune Mexico Bureau

Relations between Mexico and the United States are "very fine indeed," and the close personal relationship between the U.S. and Mexican presidents is likely to continue under Miguel de la Madrid Hurtado, the man most likely to be elected Mexico's chief of state in July, says Mexico's new ambassador to Washington, D.C.

Ambassador Bernardo Sepulveda Amor, often mentioned as Mexico's next foreign minister in the De la Madrid government, spoke to the San Diego press yesterday before delivering the commencement address at the University of San Diego and receiving an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree.

The warm relationship between Presidents Reagan and Lopez Portillo, widely recognized as a chief factor in improved relations between the two countries following estrangement during the Carter administration, is likely to continue when De la Madrid takes office in December, Sepulveda said.

And, he said, the political will necessary to solve problems between the two countries is alive in both countries' capitals.

"President Reagan and presidential candidate Miguel de la Madrid met last year at Camp David, when the candidate was secretary of budget and planning," the ambassador said. "To my understanding that is (an) auspicious beginning."

"Since they are very much aware of the importance of a very close and friendly relationship between the two presidents, I would think the two of them will make every effort to maintain this tradition."

Sepulveda, 40, was appointed ambassador March 18, replacing Hugo Margain, now a candidate for the Mexican Senate.

Educated in law at Mexican National University and in international law at Cambridge University in England, Sepulveda has worked extensively with Miguel de la Madrid in the Budget and Planning and Treasury Secretaries as an adviser on international relations.

Fluent in English, he is a recognized expert on numerous issues of potential disagreement between the United States and Mexico, including foreign investment in Mexico, multinational corporations, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and the law of the sea.

Sepulveda said that in the two months since being named to his post, he has discovered a positive attitude in Washington.

"I think that the overall political relationship is very fine indeed," he said. "I have the very clear impression that the U.S. and Mexican authorities have the political will to solve the problems that face us."

"That doesn't mean that our two countries in our everyday life won't have problems."

One continuing source of difficulty is the question of immigration, he said. He said he delivered a note of concern from his government to the State Department, over the recent sweeps of California business which have employed Mexican workers without legal working papers.

"We were very concerned for their labor rights and human rights and that's why we issued the note."

On other issues the ambassador said:

— The Falkland Islands conflict between Britain and Argentina is unlikely to become a divisive issue between the United States and Mexico, despite differing perspectives.

He counted Mexico among the governments "that feel although Argentina has a legitimate claim (on the islands), the means they used were not appropriate."

— A new major devaluation of the peso is not likely, he said, due to the economic measures being put in place by the government. But a full economic recovery is "12 to 18 months away," in the ambassador's view.

— A solution to the fishing rights dispute between the two countries has still not been negotiated and no talks are going on until both sides come up with creative new proposals, he said. Mexico had hoped the bilateral issues would be solved by the International Conference on the Law of the Sea, developed by the United Nations, but that hope was lost, when the United States decided not to sign the agreement, he said.

"That means we will have to find other ways and means of finding a solution," he said. "It is an issue that shouldn't become an irritant between our countries, but an area of cooperation."

— The United States can best aid Mexico's effort at economic recovery by avoiding any new trade barriers, the ambassador said.

USD COMMENCEMENT SPEAKER

Envoy From Mexico Sees Rebound In Its Economy

By RICARDO CHAVIRA

Staff Writer, The San Diego Union

Mexico's suddenly shaky economy will rebound, probably within 18 months, the Mexican ambassador to the United States predicted here yesterday.

Bernardo Sepúlveda, a former high-level Mexican treasury official, also forecast that there will be no more drastic devaluations of the peso, despite strong rumors in Mexican economic circles.

A government emergency economic plan — including an 8 percent cut in public spending — and future stabilization in the world price of oil, Mexico's largest export, will make "a full recovery" possible, he said.

Sepúlveda's remarks, made shortly before a commencement speech at the University of San Diego, came on the heels of a gloomy prognostication last week by Mexico's Treasury Secretary Jesús Silva Herzog.

Silva also denied rumors of another drastic devaluation such as the one in February that dropped the value of the peso overnight by 40 percent against the dollar. He conceded the peso nonetheless would slip 20 to 25 percent in the course of the year, and outlined other formidable Mexican economic problems.

They included the possibility of zero economic growth in that nation during the next year, the threat of Mexico becoming the world's most indebted nation and inflation of at least 50 percent.

Those problems, Sepúlveda said yesterday, could be blamed largely on "a mistake in planning."

Petroleum revenues last year were lower than expected — about $7 billion less — because of a drop in world oil prices, he said. However, he predicted that prices would "stabilize," making for increased oil revenue.

Furthermore, Sepúlveda argued, "the economic measures recently undertaken by the Mexican government will mean an upsurge ... in the Mexican economy."

The ambassador said the best economic aid the United States could give Mexico would be "to insure that there are no new barriers to trade."

Asked about the U.S.-Mexico disagreement over fishing boundaries, Sepúlveda said there were no plans to negotiate the dispute, since there are no new proposals from either side to discuss.

Sepúlveda received an honorary doctorate of humane letters at yesterday's USD commencement ceremony, as did Helen K. Copley, chairman and chief executive of Copley Newspapers.

About 520 undergraduate students and 126 graduate students also received degrees. In addition, 260 law students graduated.

Mexico, the ambassador said, was "successful" in getting the United States and Nicaragua to agree to discuss differences over Central American policies. While U.S. officials have largely rejected Mexican offers to mediate the discussions, Sepúlveda said his country would continue to urge both countries to begin the talks.

In any case, he maintained that hostility between the United States and Nicaragua seems to have diminished — "There appears to be a better understanding between them ... and declarations are now more conciliatory."

He said the talks had been stalled recently largely because of world concern over the Falklands conflict. According to Sepúlveda, U.S. backing of England in its fight with Argentina has caused "very, very clear damage" to a key tenet of the Organization of American States (OAS).

He said the prevailing feeling among OAS members is that the United States violated an OAS treaty that provides for mutual aid if a member state is attacked militarily. The United States, he said, is seen by many members as selectively observing that accord.

However, Sepúlveda said he did not see the possibility of the OAS voting to pull its headquarters out of Washington, as some members have urged. Nor did he foresee that U.S. support for a European nation over a Latin American country would undermine U.S.-Mexico relations.

Although there was broad OAS support for Argentina's claims to the Falklands, he said, most Latin American countries did not seem to favor the use of force to regain them.

Ambassador to the United States for just two months, Sepúlveda said he has been impressed by the high degree of cooperation that exists between his country and its northern neighbor. "There is the political will to solve any problems that may exist," he said.

He hailed the close personal relationship between President Reagan and his Mexican counterpart, José López Portillo.

Sepúlveda noted that the presidential candidate of the Institutional Revolutionary Party, Miguel de la Madrid — certain to be elected this summer — already has met Mr.

Reagan.

Still, Sepúlveda characterized current efforts by the Reagan administration and Congress to restructure immigration laws as "isolationist."

"We must recognize the historical experience of each country and respect each other's path of economic and social development," the ambassador said in his speech.

Bishop Leo T. Maher of the Roman Catholic Diocese of San Diego also spoke at the commencement. He urged law graduates to strive for "intellectual honesty."

SUMMER HARBINGERS

Lemuel Shepherd III (USMC) and ROTC members from the Orange Glen High School in Escondido.

The Wagener's people fairly outdid themselves with colorful sportswear, out-of-this-world accessories, smart and ahead-of-the-times daytime clothes and some of the most striking evening wear to show up on local runways.

The emphasis this year is on pants, pants, pants. Bloomers, jodhpurs, evening shorts, city shorts in above-the-knee or mid-calf lengths, and cocktail wear in all lengths — one eye-catcher was a copper pant, slightly flared and pleated at the hip worn with a matching coat-length tunic, yum, as the phrase goes, yum.

The leg-o'-mutton sleeve is making its reappearance, especially in fall and winter clothing, while the Italian designers are into dark, muted silks and silky cottons for summer. (Wagener's does some FANTASTIC things with cotton from the store's European designers, by the way.)

Light-colored opaque stockings make the most of a trim leg under all those shorts, and sandals add a sexy touch to the whole ensemble.

Anyway, there was a veritable horde of people there either to meet the candidates, show their party loyalty or merely to eat, drink and be merry while two of the Melody Aces combo kept the music light, bright and lively. Their presence on the scene was underwritten by Andrew Westheim, husband of Jo Westheim, chairman of the evening.

Carole Ann Roos, league president, managed to stay cool and unruffled in her lacy beige knit while keeping introductions and amenities moving smoothly along.

Hostess "Sam" proudly introduced her parents, Toni and Milton Sainz, who had just been named Queen and King of the Mira Mesa Seniors group ... Toni was wearing her deep rose, flounced "coronation" gown but had left off the mantilla. Milton wore a tuxedo and ruffled shirt in honor of his royal status.

Virgil and Jane Danielson were there, as were Doris McCoy, Jean Hardin, Lynn and Christine Boze — she was one of the guest models donating her time — and Nancy Leonard.

And now to the installation luncheon of the USD Auxiliary. No fashion show here, but the guests were all dressed up for the occasion, so it was almost as good as the real thing.

La Jolla's Carol Reilly was installed as the new president along with Tina Jacobson and Eleanor Mikkelson, both of La Jolla, treasurer and corresponding secretary, respectively. (Eleanor is just back from China and is a walking encyclopedia on

Dr. Author Hughes thanked the auxiliary for its support of the university and announced that enrollment for next year is already closed. Both Msgr. Egan and Sr. Virginia McMonagle were presented with gifts of appreciation on behalf of the auxiliary with Dr. Hughes doing the honors.

Entertainment was a lively hour of "memory" music by the Village Singers, who do what they do just for the fun of it, and left nothing out of their '20s-through-the-40s presentation. The group has a thoroughly good time and some of their musical spoofs are absolutely hilarious.
