Suzanne promised.

The crowd included couples like Martina and Kim Pletcher (Kim recalled the 25th anniversary celebration of the Inter-Continental in Lisbon), Kirk and John Butler, Sally and John Thornton (John recuperating from back surgery, and walking with a cane), Karen and Christopher Sickels, Virginia and Jack Monday, the George Pardee family, Martha and George Gafford, Paytil and John Parrish, Barbara and Frank Hope, the John Whitneys, and Susan and Harry Summers.

(Susan and Harry were married a couple of months ago at Lake Tahoe, now looking forward to finishing their new oceanfront home in Del Mar — next door to Joanne and Frank Warren.)

Elsie and Frank Weston were there to support USD, and so were Edna and John Allessio, Maggie and Dr. John Mann (Maggie masterminded the party plans), Sue and Dr. Charles Edward, Mavonna and Dr. Tom Kravis (Mavonna in satin-striped chiffon by Bill Blas), Jane and John Murphy, Connie and Bob Golden, Esther and Dr. Edmond Keeney, Richie and Tawfik Khoury (Richie in strapless black by Nina Ricci), the Dan Murphills, Jane and Rear Adm. Herb Stoecklein, and Jeanne Jones with Dick Duffy and the Ted Geiseis. (Audrey and her best-selling Pulitizer Prize-winning spouse are off to Washington soon for a White House dinner.)

When the bandleader handed out his traditional Lester Lain hats, Presto! pillars of the community turned into Preppies. (Bruce Hazard, Evan Jones and Art Hughes got red huts; Art Rivkin got green.)

Doug Manchester sported a Lanin hat, and his black-and-white bow tie was a conversation piece, too. (It was a subtle plug for the upcoming Jewel Ball — "White Tiger & Tails" — planned by chairwoman Carol Bauer, who saw to it that her husband and Manchester and Jon Bilger all wore tiger-striped ties to the party.)

Dr. Irene Palmer, dean of the Pan American School of Nursing, voiced brief but eloquent thanks ("I never knew we had so many friends"), and Manchester proposed a toast to the memory of Marian Hahn, "the inspiration and driving force" behind the nursing school named for her husband.

"Muriel Hahn is here tonight in spirit," said Manchester. "That's why we're having such a good time."

The Padres' Steve Garvey was master of ceremonies for a fashion/tinction that packed the Inter-Continental ballroom earlier in the week. It was the annual salute to San Diego club women staged by the All Hallow's Women's Guild.

Six Fifth Avenue supplied the clothes, and Marianne Lotford and Helen Pickard were the women in charge.

The models of honor — representing organizations like Children's Hospital, Junior League, Las Damas Latinas, Global Guilders, and others — were Mediterranean on their way to the Beverly and Bill Macnic dou-wahing with the band's daw-wah.

Ballads like "Tell Me I'll Never Smile Again" were replaced with musical influences such as Maureen King and Tom Finn, Agnes Cipher and Jack Lewis Powell. And when Laini cut loose with some raucous rock, Ruth Maloney and Charles Melville had no trouble keeping up with the youthful midshipmen and the junior honorees. (The juniors — who handled the party's check-in chores — included Molly, Katy and Sally Manchester, Jennifer Schull, Courtney Crockett, Jan Comito, Kim Middleton, Nicole Johnson, Amy Cavanaugh, Theresa and Kristin King and Kimberly Amory. Among the midshipmen were some from this area, including Doug Santorvito, Olaf Perman, Daniel Mithers, Patrick Malley, Michael Carper, Brian Clark, Lawrence Lauglin and Stephen Smith.)

It was a big hit for St. John Mary and Maria Dumphrey chose above-the-ankle hemlines, and so did Rosemary Logan, Don Larvallie, Jean Paige and Suzanne Figi. (Suzanne had just returned from a cooking class taught by Wolfgang Puck, the Los Angeles chef who made his name at Ma Maison; then went on to greater glory at Spago and Chinots.)

"I'm actually going to start having dinner parties again,"

Betsy and Doug Manchester, honorary chairmen

Doyle.

Others in the spotlight were Juanita Whisnant, Beatrix Mort, Nancy Johnson, Thania Griffiths, Carol Shively, Molly Loomis, Carol Tuggey, Susan Garin, Allison Tihela, Bob Brophy and Kit Parkinson with her daughter, Christel (representing the National Charity League and Ticktockers).

Ginny Gustavo was an honored volunteer, and so were Lenora Craig, Victoria McIntyre, Viola Rusk, Jean Watson, Nancy Ogilvie, Maria Taggart and Yolanda Walther-Meades.

Former Air Force Coach Is Leading Candidate at USD

By DAVE DISTEL, Times Staff Writer

SAN DIEGO—Former Air Force Academy Coach Hank Egan is a leading candidate, if not the leading candidate, for the vacant University of San Diego basketball position.

Egan, 46, was released recently after 13 years as the Falcons' coach. His teams were 148-185.

Father Patrick Cahill, USD's athletic director, said a field of 90 applicants has been narrowed to approximately 15, but conceded Egan is a front-runner.

"I think, in all fairness, you'd have to say, yes, he is a leading candidate," Cahill said. "Nationally, he is a very well-known and well-respected guy."

Cahill would not list any of the other candidates.

"I'm not saying many of them are household names," he said. "We have several head coaches from Division II or III schools and a number of assistants from Division I schools."

In either case, USD would be dealing with a certain amount of risk—a Division II or III head coach stepping up or a Division I assistant calling the shots for the first time.

Egan eliminates a bit of the uncertainty because of his experience at Air Force, which is comparable to USD in terms of academic standards and philosophy.

"We need a coach who fits what USD represents in terms of academics," Cahill said. "We don't intend to change our policies."

Egan has lived with rather strict policies at Air Force.

"An institution is in business to educate kids," he said Monday, "not to run a basketball program."

Egan, who said he was at Air Force so long a change was needed, said he is not a candidate for any position other than the one at USD. He said he also is considering opportunities outside basketball in the Colorado Springs area.

"I've been in this area a long time," he said, "and I've got a lot of ties. If it comes time to make a decision, that will be one of the factors. But I liked what I saw out there."

USD will be coming off its best season at the Division I level. It was 18-10 and won the West Coast Athletic Conference championship before losing to Princeton in the first round of the NCAA playoffs.

In the aftermath, Coach Jim Brovelli elected to return to USF, his alma mater, to take over a suspended program that will resume play in 1985-86. John Cosentino, his top assistant, is going with him to USF.

Egan thinks the USD program can be sustained at the championship level.

"From my experience with the academy," he said, "I know the school system of Southern California turns out good numbers of athletes who can fit entrance requirements at USD."

If anything, it might be easier to recruit to USD because its exit requirements are not the same as those at the Air Force. Academy graduates are committed to five years in the service.

Cahill had arbitrarily set May 15 as a "deadline" for hiring a new coach, but the date is not cast in stone.
TOREROS TRAIL — The University of San Francisco holds a 17-stroke lead over USD in the West Coast Athletic Conference golf championships at Half Moon Bay. The Dons piled up seven and 10-stroke advantages on the first two days of the event, which concludes today.

The Toreros, led by Tim Barber and James Brett, were seven strokes ahead of third-place Portland and 14 up on Gonzaga. Barber and Brett, each at 153, were tied for third individually with Paul Boggia of Santa Clara.
COACHING DERBY — Hank Egan, who coached Air Force teams the last 13 years, apparently is the leading candidate to replace Jim Brevelli as head basketball coach at University of San Diego.

The Rev. Patrick Cahill said he had narrowed the list of 90 applicants to 15, but conceded Egan, 46, was in the lead for the nonce. His teams were 148-185 at the Air Force, which dismissed him earlier this year.

Lynn Schenk

Will state-level background mean victory or defeat?

(Editor’s note: Lynn Schenk, 39, is an attorney and businesswoman with extensive government experience. She has served as Secretary of California’s Business, Transportation and Housing Agency under Governor Edmund Brown Jr., worked as Deputy State Attorney General and served as a senior staff advisor to Vice President Nelson Rockefeller. Schenk also helped found the Women’s Bank of San Diego and is presently a trustee of the Clairemont University Center.

Among her achievements, Schenk has been named “Outstanding Young Citizen” by the San Diego Jaycees and “Outstanding Lawyer in Government” by the San Diego Trial Lawyers’ Association. She was also honored by the B’nai B’rith for outstanding government service. Schenk currently serves on the 1984 San Diego Olympic Torch Relay Committee, the Advisory Board of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, the Red Cross Board and Californians to Prevent Violence.

Schenk has lived in the 3rd District for most of the past 17 years and is married to Hugh Friedman, a lawyer and professor of law at the University of San Diego School of Law.)

"Structure is the key to good county government. I can provide that," says Lynn Schenk, a candidate who relies on her high-level government experience to entice voters. "Clearly, we are at a point of chaos in the county," she said. "We arrived there through erosion of a common agenda. We are at a standstill to deliver the needed services."

"Our biggest need is to provide leadership," Schenk added. "There is a very low morale level. We have more than 10,000 county employees; they shouldn't be treated like welfare recipients."

Schenk’s strongest credential in the management area is her five-year stint as head of the California Agency of Business, Transportation and Housing. In that post, she managed more than 32,000 employees and a yearly budget of nearly $2 billion.

Many of the ideas Schenk brings to the campaign are plans and programs she implemented at the state level. Among the more innovative suggestions is a scheme she calls “partners in management.” It involves bringing in middle management people from successful local firms to assist county managers in developing more efficient operations.

These outside managers would not be paid by the county, but rather would represent contributions by their companies toward the goal of better county government.

"I’ve talked to a number of San Diego industries: Pacific Bell, Aerojet General and others. They are all very enthusiastic about taking part," Schenk says.

Another idea proposed by Schenk is the concept of “quality panels.” These gatherings of managers and staff personnel are held to discuss and solve a single problem. "Staff members feel they are a part of things and work better toward a common goal when they have a chance to talk about the goal," Schenk explained.

Concerning the size of government in San Diego County, Schenk sees a need to expand certain departments. "Cuts in the Department of Management and the Budget were penny-wise but pound-foolish. By adding analysts to that staff, particularly in the fields of personnel and testing, we would be able to save money in the long run by bringing in better, more efficient workers," she noted. With regard to possible cuts in county staffing, Schenk senses a need for reductions, but chooses not to be specific. "I need to get into it first," she explained.

Schenk looks at the June 5 primary as just the beginning of the long road to the County Supervisor position. "If anybody can get the 50 percent (and negate the need for a runoff election) I can; but it’s just not realistic," she said.

The candidate is an enthusiastic supporter of the Sander project, which calls for the conversion of garbage into energy. "We need to dispose of this garbage; and we’re running out of holes in which to put it. There is a potential danger to the environment with the burning of the material. We have to be very careful here," she cautioned.

But it is the area of transportation that Schenk has adopted as the centerpiece of her campaign. "We have to find alternative methods of transporting people," she said. "Van pooling was very successful on the state level. We need to beef up our commitment to ‘park and ride’ facilities and make an investment to expand the trolley system. Let’s get on with it now."

A strong proponent of improved rail transportation, Schenk is nonetheless opposed to the bullet train proposal in its present form. "The route makes no sense," Schenk said. She added other concerns that included the impact on the environment, high financing costs and adverse changes that might result along the coastline.

The county’s financial crisis could be solved by an increase in the gasoline tax. At present, the state receives 9 cents, of which only 2.33 cents is returned to the county. Schenk would boost the state tax by another 1 to 3 cents with the stipulation that the additional revenues would be funneled back to the county.

Finally, Schenk is telling voters that her experience on the state level will reap big dividends if she is elected county supervisor. "I am effective with the legislature in Sacramento," she says. "I know how the game is played."

Aztecs romp; Toreros lose 2

San Diego State scored seven runs in the first inning and used eight pitchers to limit U.S. International to six hits in a 10-0 college baseball romp last night at Smith Field.

Chris Gwynn and Rob Knowles each went 3-for-4 with a double and a run batted to pace a 15-hit attack by the Aztecs, now 56-18. The eight Aztec pitchers struck out a total of eight in blanking the Gulls, now 21-32-2.

UC-Santa Barbara 5-4, USD 4-3 — Santa Barbara manufactured a run in the 13th inning of the first game and was handed one in the seventh inning of the nightcap as the visitors swept a Southern California Baseball Association doubleheader at USD.

UCSB’s Bob Gray singled to lead off the 13th, stole second and scored on Dave Stewart’s double to win the first game. Gray singled home the game-winner in the second game after Dan Clark had singled and reached third on a USD error.

UCSB is 43-17-3 overall and 12-7-2 in the SCBA; USD is 18-31-2 and 4-16-1.
The University of San Diego football staff, under the direction of Head Coach Brian Fogarty, will hold a football clinic this Saturday at USD's new Manchester Campus Conference Center (on main campus) and on the USD football field. Registration begins at 8 a.m. at the Manchester Center with the clinic starting at approximately 8:30. The format will include classroom lectures in the morning and on-field instruction in the afternoon.

Admission is only $5, payable in advance or at the door. The clinic includes lunch, door prizes, coffee & donuts, clinic notebook and speakers.

For an application or further information, contact Dan Henson, Football Clinic Coordinator at: University of San Diego Football Office, Alcala Park, San Diego, CA 92110, or call 291-6400, extension 4740 or 4272.

The Carlsbad Soccer Club will hold its first sign-up session for the fall season this Saturday at Chase Field from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Proof of age is required and registration fees are $20 if players register before June 30. A second registration will be held at the same location and the same time on May 26.

For more information, call the Club at 434-5600.

Baseball and track and field will be a part of MiraCosta College's Golden Anniversary Community Fair on Saturday.

More than 200 athletes will compete in the Pacific Coast Conference Track and Field Championships, which start at 1 p.m. at the stadium. The top finishers in each event will go on to the Southern California Championships preliminary meet May 11.
The principal responsibility of the California Department of Food and Agriculture is to promote and protect agricultural industry.

At the same time, it is the lead agency in managing California's pesticide program, which for years has been mired in controversy.

Critics say that constitutes an obvious conflict of interest, leading to a pesticide program catering to agricultural interests and failing to adequately protect the public.

That position is convincingly presented in the latest edition of the California Law Reporter, a publication of the Center for Public Interest Law at the University of San Diego School of Law.

Citing examples, the publication concludes that effective pesticide management requires removal of that function from CDFA. The alternative is continued proliferation of pesticide use and a short-sighted "agriculturally oriented" policy placing industry interests over public health and safety, it says.

Pesticide use has soared in California. Each year, at least 1,000 pesticide-related illnesses are reported to doctors. Thousands of other cases go unreported, health officials say.

Wells and groundwater supplies are being poisoned. Some experts say the state's lush San Joaquin Valley is becoming one big chemical cesspool. Cancer-causing EDB was discovered in grain products, and dangerous pesticide residues have been found on fruits and vegetables.

Pesticides are "stress an urgent need to reduce our reliance on chemical pest controls," says the Law Reporter.

There are strategies available. Integrated Pest Management, a system of integrating biological and cultural methods into pest-control techniques, could reduce pesticide use by 50 percent, experts say. But despite legislation and regulations designed to promote IPM, "no significant IPM implementation has yet occurred," says the publication.

It contends this is because CDFA is "overly influenced" by the agriculture industry, which is "more motivated by economic profit than long-term environmental goals."

Here's one example. The Law Reporter cites what it calls "CDFA's industry-oriented attitudes."

Under federal and state law, applicants for new pesticide registrations must provide health and safety data to enable officials to determine probable effects on humans. CDFA has interpreted the federal trade secrets law in such a way that all health and safety data "is a trade secret unless the manufacturer says otherwise," says the report.

Attempts to open up this process to allow review of health and safety data by independent experts have been fought vigorously by the chemical industry— and by CDFA.

CDFA policy in this area is "counterproductive and fosters the inherent dangers of public ignorance," the publication contends.

While it cites the need for a change, the Law Reporter's tone is not optimistic.

At the federal level, control of pesticides was shifted from the Department of Agriculture to the Environmental Protection Agency. But at the state level, says the publication, CDFA's "pesticide jurisdiction is virtually exclusive. Legislator are reluctant to encroach on CDFA's pesticide monopoly."

"The perennial campaign contributions of the farm lobby consistently and successfully maintain insurmountable barriers to change."

USD Computer Camp schedules

4 residential summer sessions

The University of San Diego School of Continuing Education will conduct a computer camp for girls and boys ages 10 to 15 this summer. This residential camp will have four two-week sessions: June 17-29, July 1-13, July 15-27, and July 29-Aug. 10.

The camp will feature a hands-on approach to computer literacy. Three levels of instruction, taught by experienced computer educators, will be offered: introductory, intermediate and advanced. Testing will be provided at the beginning of each camp session to determine the level of instruction appropriate to each camper.

In addition, campers will have a chance to develop skills in a wide range of sports activities, which may include soccer, basketball, volleyball, softball, swimming and field sports, all supervised by camp counselors.

Linda Love, Shannon Felker, Laurel Selmo, Wendy McClave, Emily Matthews, Lynn McGuire at breakfast

By JAN SECRIEST

Eighteen months later, the four Rancho Santa Fe women who completed the New York Marathon together in 1982 are still running together.

It's become much more than exercise. Now it's more of a support group. So the runners got together Friday at sunrise to honor a birthday and a unique camaraderie with champagne breakfast on the Del Mar beach — complete with tablecloth, china and silver. croissants, strawberries and spiked orange juice.

Since that October in 1982, when they had their pictures in more than a few newspapers jubilantly crossing the finish line arm in arm, their lives have taken some interesting turns.

They still get up at 5:30 to run, but the distances are between three and six miles. Their motto has not changed, however. It's still, "If you can't talk, you're running too fast."

Each of the original four — Linda Love, Emily Matthews, Laurel Selmo and Lynne McGuire, plus additions Shannon Felker and Wendy McClave — all agree unanimously on one thing: the early morning workout is vital to each or the rest. asking, "What else is there to do at that hour besides read the paper and eat?"

But they all agreed on one thing — running that marathon changed their lives. Only one had ever run a full marathon before, and they had trained for a full year together. It made a tremendous impact on their thinking and their goal-setting for the future.

"My whole attitude changed," said Emily Matthews. "I learned that you can get what you want in the end. You just have to be willing to work. You can stay up past 9 p.m., you can get up in the middle of the night to study. If you're willing, you can accomplish anything."

Lynne McGuire agreed. "Before New York I used to think that if I didn't finish something, then it wasn't meant to be. I'd give up. Now, since that marathon, I figure I can do anything — all I have to do is remember those tough training days, and I know I can do it."

"Sure, we can do whatever we want now," agreed Linda Love, a former school teacher. "And when I grow up I'll decide what I want to do," she laughed.

Laurel Selmo, the "one day at a time" philosopher during the training year, felt the most let down when the race was over. "I was so bummed on my birthday in January they threw a surprise party to try to cheer me up," she confessed. "You can't go back to doing nothing after doing something so exciting."

Selmo called in February to inquire about law school entrance exams. She was told she'd have to take them the next morning — so she did. She passed with high marks and was promptly enrolled in U.S.D. Law School.

"I'll take my first year finals next week, then I'll be super domestic for three months. In August I'll go back on the roller coaster. That's a big switch from "doing nothing."

"We've all gone on to things that we have to do," McGuire said. "We've grown, analyzed our situations, and figured out how to handle things. We can pace ourselves. I know more about what I can do as an individual and as a woman. I guess that discipline really taught me how to relate to my priorities. I know I can stretch and not cause the family to suffer."

Emily Matthews also has done some stretching, and is working on courses leading to a master's degree in Exercise Physiology. After running the New York marathon and the Avenue of the Giants seven months later, she leaped into classes in anatomy, kinesiology, and bio-mechanics of human movement.

"It's casual, like me," she admitted. "We all wear shorts and warm-ups. She's combining the new training with her background in nutrition, hoping to land in a wellness type of program combining cardio-rehabilitation and nutrition.

The newcomers to the group, Shannon Felker and Wendy McClave, found this unusual support group the answer to their need for a challenge.

"My husband has been running for years," Felker explained, "and I figured if I couldn't beat 'em, I had to join 'em. But this ladies group is even better."

When asked about the early hour — leaving the house at 5:30 to join the group, she had a ready answer. "No problem. I don't wake up 'til the second mile. Let's face it, if you were awake, would you do this?"

They all agree it is the best time of day. "You can't put on airs at that hour," said Selmo. "You can't even put on make-up. We learned who we really were."

McClave has been running the longest — more than eight years — but had only completed a half marathon. She always had the yen to "see what was around the next corner", but didn't stretch herself until she joined up with the regulars.

She's run two marathons since, the Heart of San Diego and the Avenue of the Giants. She finds great emotional support from the other women, and has promised herself one more marathon.

In fact, almost all of them have promised themselves one more marathon.

"We all need this," Love said. "The camaraderie is so special. We can bounce our frustrations off each other, say anything, and know it will never leave the group. Whether we ever run another challenge like New York again doesn't matter — it's the people that are important.

"Besides, when all your friends are in school, and you really prefer bon-bons, bubble baths and fictional books, you have to be able to express yourself somewhere. I'm the domestic innkeeper of the group — boy scouts, cub scouts, a horse, a rabbit, parrot, turtle, two dogs, two parakeets, and one cat. It fits my lifestyle."

It was Love who planned the breakfast on the Del Mar beach in honor of McGuire's birthday.

"No one asked me any questions when I was setting this up," she admitted, "but they gave me some funny looks. Maybe the folks at 19th Street are used to this sort of thing."

And at that champagne breakfast, they agreed the camaraderie they've shared is the most precious experience of all. Whether these ladies ever run another marathon together doesn't really matter, because whatever they decide to do, they'll do it with style, they'll do it well, and they'll have a support team backing them all the way.

Anyone willing to get up at that hour, five days a week, is bound to be a success. Just as long as they adhere to their motto — run slow and talk fast.

Smiles replace sadness for USD’s Egan

By T.R. Reinman
Tribune Sportswriter

It was a raw and rainy day, as late February days can be at the Air Force Academy north of Colorado Springs. The mountain winds there seem to try to shave the whole campus east onto Interstate 25.

What the ill winds of Feb. 28 blew was Hank Egan’s world slightly askew. Twenty years after being transferred to Colorado Springs, 18 after he moved to the Academy, 13 after he became the varsity’s head coach, he was out the door with a 146-185 record.

“Sadness,” said Egan yesterday, remembering that day. “That coaching there had been a big part of my life. I wanted very much to make the program successful. I thought if at any time it was starting to turn it was at that time. I was sad that it was ending, I still wanted to coach.”

That was what Hank Egan felt Feb. 28. Yesterday he felt “very fortunate. You always want to feel you’re doing something worth doing with your life. If you can be a part of what the Air Force Academy or USD is all about, you’re doing something worth doing.”

Yesterday Henry “Hank” Egan became USD’s ninth basketball coach, succeeding Jim Brovelli, who, after 10 years and, finally winning an NCAA berth, returned to coach at his alma mater, the University of San Francisco.

“We assured our players when we began the search for a new coach that there would be the best man we could find for the job,” said USD athletic director Rev. Patrick Cailll yesterday. “We found him and we got him.”

“This is going to be great for this place,” said John Prunty, who for four years typified the USD player: not much to look at on the floor, but effective, in his way, a no-quit guy, a part of something, not something else himself.

Sounds like Egan’s kind of program. Not much to look at, but effective and no quit. Remember, Air Force Academy basketball players have to be short enough to be ejected from the cockpit of a fighter plane. For 13 years Hank Egan has sent out some fine fighter pilots but not many fine big men. Yesterday he was asked what he thought when he first laid eyes on Scott Thompson, USD’s 6-foot-11 freshman, its first bona fide big man. “Where have you been all my life?” said Egan.

There are other similarities between the two schools, more reasons to believe Egan when he says “What Jim Brovelli did was set a standard here, but it’s not going to be added pressure. I think most pressure on coaches is self-created.”

Remember that neither Air Force nor USD is the kind of school that sends its starting guard out to Podunk Junior College for a few quick credits. Remember that there are bench jockeys at both schools that have higher

Egan chosen USD coach

In the world of major-college basketball, the University of San Diego is not an Indiana, a North Carolina or a UCLA. It is a special place.

"Academics and athletics have a good marriage here," Father Patrick Cahill, the Toreros' athletic director, explained yesterday afternoon. "That's why this decision was so important ... and really so easy."

Moments earlier, USD had named Hank Egan its basketball coach.

"He fits us like a glove," said Cahill. "For us, the job came up at exactly the right time because Hank was available. He was our first choice. Our only real question was, 'Would he take the job?'"

Possibly, it was a matter of fate.

Brovelli agrees.

"Hank Egan will do very well by USD," he said from San Francisco. "From the moment I saw his name among the applications I had a good feeling. He understands the school and the caliber of people he will be coaching. It makes me feel good."

"I'm going to try hard not to turn this thing around," Egan joked of a program that went 18-10 last year and won the West Coast Athletic Conference title while Air Force was playing to an 8-18 record.

"I do feel good about being here," Egan said. "There is a strong sense of family on this team... that was the first thing that struck me. The best part was the people here... that is what finally sold my wife (Judy) and I. That's why I feel comfortable about being here."

Egan stressed that he was inheriting a good program. "Jim did a hell of a job," he said. "I've fallen in love with the kids he's brought here. It would be hard for me to bring in another player this year because the feeling of family is so strong on this team I wouldn't want to recruit someone without having the rest of the players meeting him first.

"They've had success here. USD is rolling pretty good. I'm going to be like the mechanic with a screwdriver, fine tuning. When it starts to sound bumpy, I'll back off a little. We will be doing many of the things Jim did plus also some of the things I feel comfortable with."

Egan said he feels no pressure in following Brovelli. "What Jim did was set the standard," Egan said. "That does not increase or decrease the pressure on me. Most pressure on coaches is self-created."

Egan and Brovelli share common basketball values. Both run the passing game offense and seek movement away from the ball. On defense, both like to switch between man-to-man and match-up zones. "Our zones," said Egan, "are different." Air Force and USD met two seasons ago with Egan's side winning 49-47. "It was really quite an interesting game," said Egan.

A graduate of the Naval Academy, Egan spent the first two years of his 20-year stint at Air Force as a military attaché. He then served there five years as an assistant coach before becoming the head coach in 1970. Egan, 46, left Air Force with a 148-184 record.

Egan was recommended to USD by Bobby Knight, coach at Indiana and of the United States Olympic team. Egan is the alternate assistant to George Raveling on the Olympic team and leaves for Sao Paulo, Brazil, May 15 to scout South American Olympic teams.

Cahill said that after Egan returned to USD for a second interview late last week, the selection committee dropped plans to interview two other finalists, including UC-Riverside coach John Masi. "Egan was our unanimous selection," Cahill said.

Egan did as much checking on us as we did on him," Cahill said.

Egan now must select two assistant coaches. One of the candidates is David Babcock, Brovelli's No. 2 aide and the coach in charge of the day-to-day operations since Brovelli and his top aide, John Cosentino, went to USF. Babcock also has an offer from New Mexico State. Egan said he would also try to hire an aide from his Air Force staff. He plans to complete his staff this week.

Since leaving Air Force, Egan had an offer to coach at Southern Colorado College plus several opportunities in private business.

"Leaving Colorado Springs was as hard for us as it was for Brovelli to leave San Diego," Egan said.

"But this is a move Judy and I wanted to make. This is where I want to coach. This is the only basketball job I applied for. If I hadn't got this job, I don't know what would have happened."

Egan's eagerness to have the USD job was one of the things that most impressed Cahill, who all along had said one of the keys was finding a coach who would remain at USD for the long run.

Entering his first meeting with the USD players yesterday afternoon, Egan encountered 6-foot-11 freshman center Scott Thompson. "Where have you been all my life?" the coach asked.

"Right here, waiting," said Thompson.

Yesterday the wait for Egan and USD ended.
Hank Egan Named USD Basketball Coach

Former Air Force Coach Hopes to Continue Winning Tradition

By MARC APPLEMAN, Times Staff Writer

SAN DIEGO—When a college basketball coach accepts a new job, he usually says he expects to implement his own style and turn things around.

Not Hank Egan, who Tuesday was named the new basketball coach at the University of San Diego. Egan, who for 13 years was the Air Force coach, said just the opposite.

"I'm going to try very hard not to turn this thing around," he said.

Under Jim Brovelli, who left to accept a coaching position at the University of San Francisco, USD is coming off its most successful season at the Division I level, a West Coast Athletic Conference championship and an appearance in the NCAA playoffs.

Mike Whitmarsh, the team's leading scorer, and guard John Prunty, are the only key players graduating from last season's 18-10 team.

"The standard set by Jim Brovelli won't increase or decrease the pressure I put on myself," Egan said.

Egan, an alternate assistant coach to George Raveling for the United States Olympic basketball team, said the only tough part of his decision was leaving Colorado Springs after living there for 20 years.

While in San Diego this week, Egan will try to pick an assistant coach. He said he will meet today with Dave Babcock, an assistant coach under Brovelli. Egan has held discussions with one of his assistant coaches at Air Force. Until that coach gets clearance to leave the Air Force Academy, Egan did not want to disclose his name.

The search for a new head coach at USD began just over a month ago. Father Patrick Cahill, USD's athletic director, said a field of 90 applicants had been narrowed down to approximately 15, but that Egan was "definitely our first choice."

Cahill said he talked to a lot of knowledgeable basketball people about Egan, and they had the highest respect for him.

USD

"My biggest concern was not hiring someone who would use our school as a stepping stone," Cahill said, adding that he was happily surprised when many of the applicants, including Egan, told him not to sell his basketball program short.

"We are just so pleased to have him because he fits us like a glove," Cahill said.

Egan, 46, is from Brooklyn and graduated from the Naval Academy. He has spent the last 18 years, 13 of them as head coach, at the Air Force Academy, where he compiled a 148-185 record.

Like Brovelli, Egan was at school that stressed academics as well as athletics. On the court, Egan also believes strongly in the team concept.

"I have found there to be a real feeling of family amongst the players here," he said after meeting with the team. "No one person is above the team."

Including Egan.

"I'm not bringing an ego trip in here," he said. "They've had success and I just hope to bring them some things I'm comfortable with."
Hank Egan becomes USD basketball coach

SAN DIEGO (AP) 292 — Hank Egan, fired after 13 seasons as basketball coach at the Air Force Academy, yesterday was named basketball coach at the University of San Diego.

Egan, 46, replaces 10-year coach Jim Brovelli, who resigned in order to take the head job at his alma mater, the University of San Francisco. Brovelli's final team finished 18-10 and earned the school's first-ever trip to the NCAA basketball tournament.

Egan said a coach coming to a new school usually promises to "turn things around. But in this case I'm going to try very hard not to turn things around."

Egan's Air Force teams, hampered by the height limitations imposed on academy cadets, won 148 games and lost 185. His last team was 8-19, including a 3-13 mark in the Western Athletic Conference.

"We have every confidence that he will continue to build on USD's commitment to a successful basketball program within a strong academic environment," said USD athletic director Rev. Patrick Cahill.

Egan, the only candidate interviewed for the job, was a three-time basketball letterman at Navy and played several seasons on Air Force service teams.

In 1973, he was Air Force liaison for the U.S. Olympic basketball trials that were held at the academy.

Egan is a defense-oriented coach who guided the Falcons to a 16-9 record in 1976 and a 15-10 mark in 1978.

Former Air Force players under his guidance included the academy's all-time leading scorer, Tim Harris, and the all-time leading rebounder and shot blocker, Reggie Jones.

Before becoming the second head coach in Air Force basketball history, Egan was the freshman coach for two seasons and was chief scout and recruiter during the 1970-71 season. From 1966 to 1968, he was an assistant junior varsity coach.

Brovelli concluded his 11-year stay at USD with a 160-130 record.
USD gets its man: Hank Egan

"I was really impressed. I can tell he will fit in well here... he definitely was their No.1 man."

Hank Egan has a list of basketball accomplishments about as long as Anthony Reuss’ 6-foot-7 frame.

Reuss will be a key ingredient to the University of San Diego men’s basketball team next season as a senior. Egan is the guy who will stir the ingredients in hopes of producing a winning mixture.

Tuesday afternoon in a selection which surprised no one, Egan was named to replace Jim Browell as the Toreros’ coach. Browell took his talents north to try and renovate the University of San Francisco’s basketball program, which has one year left after being dropped from the intercollegiate scene for three years.

Egan’s accomplishments include: the alternate coach to George Raveling (University of Iowa) for the United States Olympic Basketball Team; coach and/or of players participating in the Olympic tryouts; member of the Legislative Commission of the National Basketball Coaches Association of America; and recently was one of ten coaches chosen by the NCAA to participate and represent the country’s coaches in a special meeting of President’s, Athletic Directors and Faculty Representatives called to study the strengthening of academic requirements for intercollegiate athletics.

"Today (Tuesday) was the first time I met him," said Reuss, who was the team’s top scorer and second-leading scorer and rebounder this past season. "It was in passing. I saw him in the gym and stopped in to talk to him. I was really impressed. I can tell he will fit in well here. From everything leading up to it, talking to people here like Father (Patrick) Cahill (the Athletic Director), he definitely was their No.1 man."

"He was really highly recommended. All we were getting was positive input from all over country. We’re pretty lucky to get him."

Egan comes from the Air Force Academy, where he spent 13 seasons as the head coach. Egan was only the second coach in the Falcons’ history. He left the Air Force Academy when his three-year contract was not renewed after the second year.

The 46-year-old Egan compiled a 148-185 record as the Falcons’ mentor. He had three winning seasons, the last being in 1977-78.

Reuss, for one, doesn’t worry about that record. "You’re just not recruiting a guy for four years there," Reuss said. "It’s tough to get quality basketball players."

"My wife and I agonized on this decision," said Egan, who is from Brooklyn. "Colorado Springs had been home for us for 20 years. It was hard to break away. But coming to USD is something we wanted to do."

And it’s something the USD officials wanted to have him do.

It’s no secret Egan was the leading candidate for the job from day one. The Air Force Academy and USD have a lot in common. Both are tough academic schools and both are tough to recruit to.

"Usually coaches come in and say they are going to turn things around," said Egan. "Well, I’m going to try very hard not to turn things around."

USD enjoyed its best season ever on the Division I level last season. Browell led his troops to an 18-10 record, the West Coast Athletic Conference championship and a berth into the NCAA Tournament.

Lowery, Packard set to don running shoes

By Lynne Carrier
Timepiece Staff Writer

Ron Packard, the freshman congressman from Carlsbad, must envy his Republican colleague, Rep. Bill Lowery, R-San Diego.

Lowery, running for a third term in the 43rd District, is unsophisticated in the June 5 primary. He can sit back and plot his strategy for the November election from his oceanfront home.

But Packard, who’s still trying to win his first primary in the 43rd District, must turn back a challenge by fellow Republican Margaret “Betty” Ferguson, who is on leave from her law practice in Vista to serve as an aide to Supervisor Paul Eckert.

Two years ago, 18 Republicans vied for the nomination to succeed veterans GOP Rep. Claire Burton in the heavily Republican district. Packard emerged on top.

Please see CONGRESS, A-9

Congress

Orange County millionaire Johnnie C. Overton emerged the winner after a vitriolic campaign, with Packard a close second. But Packard went on in the general election to become the fourth person in history to win a congressional seat as a write-in candidate.

Three Democrats are vying in the 43rd District primary, and four in the 44th. Each incumbent also will face a Libertarian opponent in the general election.

Despite the crowded field of candidates, only one of the challengers, Robert L. Simmons, a Democrat running in the 41st District, raised and spent enough to file a contribution statement for the first quarter of 1984. He reported about $15,000 in contributions, including a $4,000 loan from himself to his campaign.

Lowery, who won two years ago with more than two-thirds of the vote and is running in a heavily Republican district, says he has collected more than $100,000 in donations. A veteran campaigner at the age of 27, he started volunteer work with Republican candidates at the age of 12. Lowery visited his district 25 times last year, conducted town hall meetings and mailed out many newsletters.

Nevertheless, local Democratic leaders insist that the 41st has become a “winnable” district for Democrat because of the way its boundaries were redrawn.

The new borders shrank the Republican edge in the 41st from 10,655 votes last November to 5,800 last week. The district encompasses a large portion of central San Diego, Mira Mesa, Rancho Penasquitos and coastal communities from Point Loma to Solana Beach.

Democratic candidate Simmons, 56, a professor of law at the University of San Diego, is getting enthusiastic backing from San Diego’s Democratic establishment. He moved to San Diego 12 years ago, after serving eight years as a judge in Lake County, Ohio, near Cleveland.

He was a co-founder of the San Carlos area council, a co-founder of UCAN, a consumer organization on the alert for questionable utility rate hikes. He also is a member of a legal team opposing the high-speed bullet train proposed to run between San Diego and Los Angeles.

In 1978, a rare virus left Simmons totally blind. He adjusted, continued his teaching career and says his handicap would not hinder him if he’s elected.

In the primary campaign, he’s focusing more on Lowery than on his three Democratic opponents, homebuilder Linda Carlston, retired dentist Norman E. Mann and scientist Daniel Hostetter.

He criticized Lowery for supporting measures that increase nuclear weapons, which Simmons described as “a danger to my five sons’ future,” and for voting in Congress against an Equal Rights Amendment bill. He also said he believed Lowery hasn’t done enough to protect the San Diego coastline from offshore oil drilling and criticized the congressman for not coming out against the bullet train.

Lowery said he didn’t vote against the concept of an Equal Rights Amendment, which he supports, but objected to a procedure that would have limited debate on the floor of the House, and he voted against that.

Lowery relied on his efforts to keep oil rigs from springing up along the San Diego coastline, as the Reagan administration had planned. He said he, along with the rest of the San Diego congressional delegation, helped push through the passage of a moratorium on offshore drilling within 15 miles of the coast.

Another prospective Lowery opponent, Carlston, 46, who moved to Clairemont from the Panorama City area in January, is a supporter of Lyndon B. Johnson. The onetime Marxist turned Democratic presidential candidate who favors high technology, revitalizing basic industries and development of a laser beam defensive system. Her husband, Peter, also is a running for Congress, against Rep. Jim Bates, D-San Diego, in the 44th District.

Hostetter, 41, a scientist currently building prototypes for Chrysler Corp. in making his second congressional bid. He ran unsuccessfully in the 41st District in 1979, then dropped out of politics until his children had grown.

Hostetter said he worked 10 years with Lockheed’s missile and space division but grew disillusioned by work on weapons systems. He opposes the proliferation of nuclear arms and U.S. military involvement in Central America.

Mann is running for Congress for the second time, having also been a candidate 14 years ago. Mann, who worked three years as a volunteer dentist in Israel, says he wants to eliminate nuclear weapons, strengthen Social Security and Medicare and balance the federal budget by cutting a lid on the national debt ceiling.

In November, Lowery also will face Sara Baas, 37, a Libertarian candidate who was a professor of computer science at San Diego State University for 12 years.

She criticized Lowery for opposing legal abortions and said she feels he goes along with Reagan administration policies too often. Baas said against U.S. military involvement in many countries.

In the 43rd District, which covers most of the North County primary, but Colorado and Los Angeles, Packard’s challenge to Packard in the Republican primary has forced the 3-term incumbent to cut back on spending as much as $70,000 by June 5, far more than he had anticipated.

“We need to make a strong showing in this primary in the hope of eliminating the need for primary campaigning,” said Packard.

Ferguson, 53, a San Marcos grandmother who, in addition to her job with Packard, owns a property management business, described Packard as an “ineffective” freshman congressman. She criticized him for failing to get public endorsement of funding commitments for construction of Santa Margarita Dam and for not taking a strong stand against the proposed San Diego-Los Angeles high-speed bullet train.

This year’s 43rd District race is a far cry from the past two stormy primaries. In 1980, Tom Metzger, a Ku Klux Klan leader from Fallbrook, won the Democratic nomination but was overwhelmed in the general election by incumbent Burton.

Then there was the 1982 brohaha featuring Oceanus.

Although the 43rd is heavily Republican, three Democrats are running in the primary.

Leis Humphreys, 37, president of the Leucadia Unincorporated Water District, has support from mainstream Democrats. She criticized Packard for opposing the Equal Rights Amendment, and said he had not achieved much during his term in Congress.

Her primary opponents include Kevin E. Schmidt, a 26-year-old Vista civil engineer running as a LaRouche Democrat, and Randall Toler, 37, of Huntington Beach, an anti-nuclear activist.

Although Toler is registered as a Democrat, he is active in the USA Green Party and describes himself as a radical in support of a variety of environmental causes.

Schmidt said he advocates LaRouche’s policies because they would stimulate a level of technology and economic aid that would eventually provide for the needs of the world’s population.

Paulus Avery, 47, a Libertarian living in Oceanside, too, is a political researcher, also is challenging Packard. She supports a balanced budget amendment and a substantial cut in the size of the government, which she describes as “oppressive, almost dictatorial.”
Job picture brightening for university graduates

By Joseph Thesken
Tribune Education Writer

Senior graduating this summer from San Diego's universities are finding the job market "bullish," with company recruiters more active than ever on the local campuses.

Career-placement officers at the University of California at San Diego and University of San Diego report the highest number of job interviews in the schools' histories, while San Diego State University experienced the second-highest.

This brighter employment picture mirrors a national trend.

Nancy Pengilly, resource information coordinator for the College Placement Council in Bethlehem, Pa., said: "This year's job picture for the graduate is very positive."

"The recovery has finally hit the campuses," she added. "Company recruiters say their schedules (of job interviews with students) are full. They (recruiters) are seeing more competition than ever before."

Jack Nowell, the state's labor market analyst in San Diego, said he sees a loosening up of the previously tight job market in the county.

"Things are looking pretty good," he said. "My original projection of new jobs in San Diego County for this year was 27,000, which would be quite a step up from the previous year - 12,000.

"At this point, I think my estimate may be quite conservative. There probably could be 30,000 to 35,000 new jobs opening. I think it's a reflection of the (upswing of the) national economy."

Neil Murray, UCSD career planning director, said he expects the university to have had about 3,000 job interviews by commencement June 17. That figure is 870 more than in 1982-83, the previous high.

"The number of job interviews at San Diego State in the current year will total about 11,000, or 1,600 more than last year," said Judy Gumbinner, career-and-placement officer. "This is the second best year - 1981-82 had over 11,300." SDSU graduation is May 20.

At USD, job interviews hit 1,170 this year, compared to the previous high of 870 last year, according to Linda Scales, co-director of its career counseling office.

SDSU has a student body in excess of 33,000, while UCSD has 13,000 and USD has 5,000.

"We characterize this year's job market as bullish," said Gumbinner. "The students this year were more confident about job opportunities. Generally, they could be more selective than last year."

"It indicates a stronger economy. We were successful in attracting some new employers, as well as the regulars," Murray, while not as enthusiastic as Gumbinner, said he was encouraged by the activity.

"I'd say it's stronger this year, but not nearly as dramatic an improvement as 1982-83 was over the preceding year," he said. "The recession really hurt in 1981-1982."

Scales said the recruiters who visited USD were making more job offers than the previous year.

"Several students were in the pleasant position of having to decide between multiple job offers," she added.

University graduates with degrees in engineering and computer science continue to be the most sought-after by companies, particularly those in high-technology areas, as was noted in San Diego, Pengilly said.

This assessment was confirmed by career officials at UCSD and SDSU.

Pengilly said the College Placement Council, a clearinghouse of statistics on jobs and starting salaries for many of the nation's universities, also found that those with humanities and social science degrees are not being ignored by employers.

Port, developer set for showdown over hotel tower

By Greg Gross
Staff Writer

The San Diego Unified Port District set the stage yesterday for a showdown next week between port commissioners and developer Doug Manchester over the building of a second hotel tower for his recently opened Inter-Continental Hotel.

With board chairman Daniel Spurck absent, the board voted 6-0 to "invite" Manchester to next Tuesday's board meeting to state his intentions. The so-called "second tower" is considered critical to the proposed downtown convention center.

"If they don't build a second tower, we may not have a convention center there," said commissioner Louis Wolfsheimer.

Commissioner Maureen O'Connor, who has already clashed with Manchester over development plans for the convention center area, said she was "nervous" about the hotel situation.

O'Connor made her comments as the commissioners discussed a $6.4 million agreement with the architectural team chosen to design the convention center. The board approved the agreement, but also voted to have Manchester come before them next week to say whether he plans to build the second tower.

"We shouldn't finalize anything until we know what deal we have in front of us," O'Connor said. "Maybe we should get all the proposals in front of us ... and quit playing cat and mouse. We haven't had full disclosure at all."

The site is adjacent to that of the proposed downtown convention center. In the original plan, twin oval-shaped hotel towers totalling more than 1,200 rooms were to be built near the convention center, with the room taxes from those hotels used to defray the center's operating deficit in its first years.

Without the second tower, those room tax dollars would be cut by half.

Manchester also has an option to build a third hotel on the site. But under the agreement through which he leased the land from the Unified Port District, he must have construction of the second tower under way by April 30, 1985, or lose his option to build the third hotel.

However, Manchester has said there will be no second tower without construction of a ballroom and conference facility next to the present Inter-Continental Hotel.

The Port Commission deferred for a week approval on architectural plans for the building, as port director Don L. Nay and some commissioners voiced unhappiness with the design.

Also, the developers want the hotel site "parceled," or subdivided into smaller sections, to obtain separate loans to finance the second hotel. No parcelization, no second tower.

"Doug has already said that," said Manchester spokesman Ben Clay.

Commissioners also voted to have the San Diego representatives on the port commission and port staff reach an agreement with the City of San Diego on the overall operation of the convention center.

In other action, the board approved a record $28.1 million operating budget, largest in its history. In doing so, it turned down more than $13 million in requests for assistance and matching funds from local organizations.

Among those organizations that had their requests reduced substantially or denied outright were the San Diego Convention & Visitors Bureau, public television station KPBS, the San Diego State University Foundation, the U.S.-Mexican Studies Center at UC San Diego, and the Year of the Ocean Foundation.

The ConVis request for a $100,000 grant was reduced to $35,000. KPBS-TV's request of a $25,531 grant was rejected entirely, as was the SDSU Foundation's petition for a $64,113 grant and $15,000 in matching funds sought by the U.S.-Mexican Studies Center.
USD schedules 2 commencements Sunday

A record number of graduates will receive degrees at the University of San Diego's commencement Sunday, starting at 10:30 a.m. in the campus stadium.

Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., former mayor of San Diego, will be the commencement speaker.

A total of 873 degrees will be awarded. The previous high for graduates was in 1983, when 360 degrees were presented.

Robert F. Drinan, a law professor and former congressman, will address the USD School of Law graduates at 3 p.m. Sunday in the stadium.

Drinan was a member of the House from 1971 to 1981, representing Massachusetts. Before that, he was dean and a professor of law at Boston College Law School. He now is president of Americans for Democratic Action.

Law degrees will be given to 307 graduates.
Maddocks-Stevens

Vicki Lynn Maddocks became the wife of Russell Walter Stevens in a ceremony April 26 in Presidio Park. A reception followed at the Cafe del Rey Moro. The bride is the daughter of Marian Maddocks of San Diego and David Maddocks of Del Mar. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Stevens of San Diego. The new Mrs. Stevens attended the University of San Diego, where her husband is now a student. The newlyweds will live here.
Schenk turns her talents to reaching the voters

By GREGORY DENNIS
Editor of The Citizen

A prominent member of the Jerry Brown administration, with five years of experience working closely with Brown and other Democrats, a woman with no experience in elective office, the cabinet secretary with responsibility for transportation when the Legislature passed the bill eliminating the path of the bullet train.

This is one of the frontrunners in the race for the Republican-dominated 3rd Supervisorial District.

Schenk's motivations, then, are hardly financial. They may have something to do with ambition, and they certainly involve an interest in public affairs.

When Gov. Brown himself was seeking higher office and various other members of the administration were abandoning ship to look for better jobs, Schenk stayed on, riding out the last days of that unique administration. She had the chance to run one of the biggest and long-standing arms of state government, and she took advantage of it.

These days, the personable Schenk is making the most of that state experience, talking up her knowledge of business and transportation issues to speak of getting voters interested in her campaign.

Indeed, getting enough people to sit up and notice may be Schenk's biggest problem. While she's respected in political and business circles, Schenk isn't very well known outside that element.

All of that may change in the next few weeks, however, as Schenk's campaign uses the mail, billboards and other media to let 3rd District voters know who she is and what she's running for.

That name identification, she hopes, will be enough to vault her... past the other Democrat in the race. Deputy District Attorney Michael Pent, and force favorite Susan Golding, a Republican, into a November runoff.

If one candidate compiles more than 50 percent of the vote in the June 5 primary, he or she will win the seat outright.

The 3rd District includes much of northern San Diego and encompasses Del Mar, Solana Beach and Cardiff. Its northern border is Santa Fe Drive. To reach out to an electorate that doesn't know her, Schenk has been using her political connections to raise the estimated $150,000-$200,000 total it will take by November to win the district.

She's raised enough money so far to hire heavy-hitting political consultant Ken Rietz—who ran the unsuccessful gubernatorial campaign of Mike Curb. Prominent Republican Tom Stickles has signed on as co-chair of the campaign, and Sheriff John Duffy is also a Schenk supporter.

All three of those backers, Schenk hopes, will help her fend off the criticism from Golding that Schenk is a "Jerry Brown Democrat"—a pejorative term in a district with its political center in conservative La Jolla.

Indeed, while Schenk is generally recognized for her intelligence and ability to articulate the issues, she's also generally felt to carry a lot of baggage into this race.

Schenk deals with those criticisms directly, defending her work to improve the business climate in California and the Brown administration's record in providing new jobs. Schenk says that during her tenure in Sacramento, she was able to find additional state money for San Diego transportation projects. And she attempts to turn around Golding's criticisms by saying Golding "has problems with her own record" that would lead Golding to want to focus the debate on Schenk's positions and not her own.

Schenk's principal vulnerability so far as local voters are concerned is the bullet train. She was part of an administration that backed the concept of high-speed rail and was involved in negotiations that led eventually to legislation creating bonding authority for the bullet and smoothing the public review process for the train.

Schenk acknowledges her role but points out that bullet train promoters were speaking "in general terms" of a train route along Interstate 5. She also says the intention of the bullet legislation was to begin the process of public discussion, not circumvent the public and railroad the train into existence.

These days, Schenk is careful to note that the adamantly opposes the proposed coastal route and extensive tunneling for construction of the train. She criticizes current supervisors for not going on record in opposition to the coastal route, while at the same time saying she continues to support high speed rail as a concept.

Schenk's position on growth issues has won her the support of the local Sierra Club chapter in a district where most of the chapter's members live. Golding, on the other hand, has received the backing of builders' and real estate organizations. Yet Schenk appears to be a moderate on growth issues, saying that the county needs to follow its growth management plan but also noting that it's been six years since the plan was implemented and saying it's time for a review to determine if the plan needs to be revised.

Schenk's positions will obviously prove to be important in this race. But even more than by those positions, one is struck in talking to Schenk by her friendly nature and her fierce determination. With a smile on her face, time after time she calls for "very aggressive leadership" on the Board of Supervisors. It's obviously not in Schenk's nature to sit back and let things happen to her.

Weak public schools threaten American dream, SDSU told

By Joseph Theeken
Tribune Education Writer

The American dream for today's college graduates is in jeopardy unless the nation's public school system is strengthened, Pulitzer Prize-winning author David Halberstam warned at San Diego State University's commencement yesterday.

Halberstam said the real threat for the United States comes not so much from competition in the marketplace with Japan, but from a trend in American education which could alienate a huge segment of our population.

"There is a danger of a new alignment in our society based on education," he told SDSU's 7,200 graduates and 25,000 spectators at Aztec Bowl.

"Those who are educated in high technology (areas) will be successful, and those who aren't will be shut out (of the American dream).

"The question Americans should ask is not will we be able to compete with Japan in the auto or electronic industry, but will we have a better public school system in the next 10 to 20 years."

U.S. strength means freedom, Wilson tells USD graduates

By Scott LaFee
Tribune Staff Writer

The United States can remain free only if it remains strong, Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., told the 1984 graduating class at the University of San Diego yesterday.

Wilson's remarks to 980 graduates and a packed crowd at USD's campus stadium ranged from what he called a resurgence in the "excesses of the 60's and 70's" to arms control and the Soviet menace.

Among the worst excesses, Wilson said, was the attack on free speech by both leftist and rightist factions. Recalling U.N. ambassador Jeanne Kirkpatrick's visit to the University of California at Berkeley last year, Wilson said the hecklers and protesters who finally forced her to stop a speech were "shocking and cowardly."

"When shooting replaces speaking, blinking becomes an endangered species," the former San Diego mayor said.

He called those who attempt to repress others' opinions "the new barbarians within our walls."

Such repression is expected in a place like the Soviet Union, Wilson said. With stories about Russian dissident Andrei Sakharov and arms control, the 90-year-old junior senator accused the Soviet Union of worldwide hegemony and an insatiable desire for global power.

"The Soviet Union is not our friend," he said. "It is not the moral equivalent of the United States. The Soviets are cunning and ruthless. They have different institutions. We have a history of freedom. They have a history of oppression. We cannot afford the responsibility of dealing with them except from a position of strength."

"But they are rational," Wilson said. "They do not want nuclear war. They want to achieve an overwhelming military advantage so that they can extort concessions without firing a shot."

Wilson said detente had proven to be a mistake; trade was no guarantee two countries would not go to war. He said only a strong military with specific arms control goals would keep the Soviets in check.

"We must press the Soviets relentlessly," he said, "at the arms control bargaining table and in world opinion."

Wilson urges USD graduates to keep peace through strength

By Lew Searl
Staff Writer

Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., yesterday called on the University of San Diego's Class of 1984, 605 Strong, to join him in an effort to keep peace in the world through national strength.

"We have learned the hard way that it is not enough for a democracy to be good and just," Wilson said. "They (the Soviets) must learn from our clear resolve that they cannot win an arms race with us because our goal is freedom.

He said Americans should hold "freedom aloft as a beacon. No nation can remain free unless it remains strong."

The former San Diego mayor is a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and he brought a call for national unity to the largest graduating class in USD history.

The mid-morning ceremony was a 56-yard line graduation rite, a tested affair out in the marvelous May sunshine at the university's athletic stadium. More than 8,000 guests assembled in the bleachers and on folding chairs on the grass.

Participating guests and speakers sat on the stage on aquamarine padded chairs. The podium was covered with white, scalloped plastic like an arbor in the park.

Promptly at 10:30 a.m. the processional began, and the seniors in their black robes marched slowly to their seats.

Author E. Hughes Jr., USD president, in his greetings suggested the students go on to share what they have learned with others. "That is the best of what this university is all about."

Student Cathy Ann Campbell, who won the Alcalo Award as outstanding female graduate, gave the senior address and told her classmates to "take what you have become and share it with the world.

"God bless you," Campbell, an English major, said in conclusion.

"...and have a nice life."

Steven Andrew Callaway, an accounting major, won the Franklin Award as outstanding male graduate.

Earlier, before Wilson addressed the Class of 1984, the students received an honorary doctor of laws degree conferred by Hughes and the Most Rev. Leo T. Maher, bishop of San Diego.

Wilson told the audience he has become appalled at what he sees as a resurgence of political excesses, both right and left.

"I am troubled by an attitude to repress free expression of thought," he said.

Wilson referred to the shouting down of U.N. Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick when she attempted to speak at UC Berkeley. "It was shocking and cowardly and incredible that it occurred on a college campus," he said.

When California's junior senator had concluded his comments the Class of '84 rose to receive their diplomas.

Later yesterday at Torero Stadium, Father Robert F. Drinan, a Georgetown University professor of law who served as a congressman from Massachusetts for 10 years until he stepped down in 1991 at papal request, addressed the 27th commencement of USD's School of Law. Approximately 60 persons with signs gathered on a hill behind the speakers' platform to protest what they said has been a pre-abortion stand by Drinan over the years.

Law degrees were awarded to 307 students.
Handicap Won't Stop Candidate

Being Blind Doesn't Slow Simmons' Drive for 41st District Win

By BARRY M. HORSTMANN, Times Staff Writer

For local Democratic Party officials, who often have difficulty attracting strong candidates for local races, the resume of 41st Congressional District candidate Robert L. Simmons reads like a dream.

A lawyer and law professor at the University of San Diego, Simmons has published several books on criminal law. Before moving to San Diego in 1972, Simmons was a common pleas court judge in northeastern Ohio and the law director of three Ohio cities. He is the co-founder of the Utility Consumers' Action Network (UCAN), a group that aims to keep down the San Diego Gas & Electric Co.'s rates, and a respected community leader in San Carlos.

Simmons also is blind.

His blindness has not stopped Simmons from doing much in his personal or professional life, and he says he doubts that it will be a serious handicap in his long-shot bid to unseat Rep. Bill Lowery (R-San Diego).

"I'm hoping that people will decide to allow a blind man to be their guide to a new vision of America," said the 56-year-old Simmons, who lives with his wife in San Carlos and is the father of five sons.

Has Endorsements

Indeed, in politics, where being unusual often carries with it certain advantages—namely, additional news media attention and public exposure—Simmons' physical handicap could be a political boon.

If, as expected, Simmons wins the four-candidate June 5 Democratic primary—he has been endorsed by many local elected Democrats and clearly is the preference of party officials—his blindness could generate the kind of publicity that is essential if a candidate is to have even an outside chance of upsetting a powerful incumbent. Simmons' primary opponents include homebuilder Linda Carlson, engineer Daniel Hostetter and dentist Norman E. Mann.

"We certainly have no plans to try to capitalize on my (blindness), but obviously, it's something that we can't hide," Simmons said. "I'm blind. That's a fact of my life. If that causes people to pay closer attention to what I say, well, I'm willing to take help wherever I can get it."

Simmons lost his eyesight in 1978 over a 48-hour period as a result of what he termed "a hit and run virus."

"It took me about three weeks to accept what had happened and start adjusting," Simmons recalled. "At first, I was getting the worst kind of response from my family and friends—sympathy. And I started feeling sorry for myself. The farthest thing from my mind, like everyone else's, is that I could wake up some morning with no eyesight. I suppose like anyone else in that situation, I wondered, 'Why me?'"

The turning point, Simmons said, came when he met a rehabilitation counselor who taught him certain technical skills, such as how to get around with a cane, and, more importantly, provided him with valuable advice.

"He spoke roughly to me, and that's exactly what I needed to hear," Simmons said. "He told me it was time to stop wallowing in mawkish self-pity and get back to work, and I did."

Simmons returned to work within several weeks after losing his sight and insists that the past six years "have been the most productive of my life." During that period, he has written a book, "Winning Criminal Cases," co-founded the San Carlos Area Council and UCAN, and led successful community fights to prevent the construction of radio antennas on Cowles Mountain and for a zoning provision that will protect park areas from high-rises. He also is a legal consultant to opponents of the proposed San Diego-to-Los Angeles "bullet" train.

Those accomplishments, Simmons believes, could help him overcome any skepticism that voters might have about whether blindness would hamper his effectiveness as an elected official.

"I'll be glad to compare my accomplishments since losing my sight with anyone, especially Lowery," Simmons said. "A man is a measure of his abilities, not his disabilities."

In Perspective

The passage of time also has allowed Simmons to place his blindness in perspective.

"Being blind is a pain in the ass, but nothing more," Simmons said. "It's not true, as sighted people believe, that being blind makes life empty and a real drag. Because I once had sight, I have visual imagery and can visualize things. When I'm in a familiar place or smell a certain fragrance."

Simmons also has a habit of putting people around him at ease about his blindness by making light of the handicap.

"Probably the major difference it made in my life is that now I don't..."
SIMMONS: Blindness Is No Barrier

"I've never once heard Bob get depressed or feel hindered in any way..."

Robert L. Simmons uses a tape recorder to store information. The University of San Diego law professor says that his blindness is no handicap in his campaign for a nomination to run for Congress.

Lowery last year.

Looking beyond the primary, Simmons said that he hopes to make Lowery's record—which he characterizes as "anti-environment, anti-women and an automatic 'yes' for every unnecessary, unwise, budget-busting defense program that comes along"—the major issue in the fall campaign.

"There's quite a gap between what Mr. Lowery says and what he does," Simmons said. "He has raised double speak to a fine art form. Our job is to simply get out the truth."

Aside from his disdain for Lowery's record, Simmons said he decided to enter the race because of his belief that "if you feel strongly about something, you have an obligation to do more than stand on the sidelines and complain."

"I've been stewing for years as a John Doe member of the public about a do-nothing Congress and finally decided it was time to do something," Simmons said. "I'm not a miracle worker and I know I can't hope to change the country overnight. But I would try to be the conscience of Congress, its hair shirt, its goad."

Chances Slim

Simmons concedes his chances of victory are slim. "Today, I see myself as having a one in 10 chance," he said. "But last fall, I would have said my chances were..."
Two other major factors contribute to Simmons' hope. One is that his connections to the legal community probably will give him a significant boost in one area where many other local Democratic congressional candidates fail—fund raising. Simmons said he expects to spend about $30,000 in the primary and about $250,000 overall in his campaign.

In addition, the 41st District, which stretches along the coast from Point Loma to Solana Beach and reaches inland as far as the San Diego-Santee boundary, is one where the Republican Party holds only a thin edge over the Democrats in voter registration—42.9% to 41.1%.

Local Democratic Party officials concede that Simmons faces tough odds, but nonetheless view his candidacy as perhaps their best shot of picking up an additional congressional seat in San Diego County this year.

"I pray for a world where people like Bob Simmons can win," said Phil Connor, San Diego County Democratic Party chairman. "He's the kind of person I'd trust my government to and who's in politics for all the right reasons."

Simmons, however, said he is not easily deterred by poor political odds.

"Every day of my life is a challenge, a fight to accomplish goals," Simmons said. "Yes, I face some big obstacles in this race. But I think I've already proved that I can overcome obstacles."
Graduates Hear Opposing Views

Sen. Wilson at USD, David Halberstam at SDSU

By DANIEL M. WEINTRAUB and NANCY REED, Times Staff Writers

In speeches that presented starkly different views of the challenges facing America and its youth, Sen. Pete Wilson (R-Calif.) and author David Halberstam addressed graduating classes of the University of San Diego and San Diego State University Sunday morning.

Wilson, San Diego's former mayor who was elected to the Senate in 1982, told almost 800 USD graduates that the greatest threat they may face will be the one posed by the Soviet Union, a country he said was bent upon conquest of much of the world, including Central America.

Halberstam, meanwhile, urged SDSU's 5,000-strong Class of '84 not to heed the advice of those "unmindful of the lessons of Vietnam" who portray the conflict in Central America as no more than a battle between the forces of communism and capitalism. The two men--Wilson a graduate of Yale and Halberstam of Harvard--could not have been more blunt in their assessment of the direction in which they believe the world is heading.

But Wilson characterized the United States as a country threatened from the outside, particularly Moscow, while Halberstam said the country's perch atop the world power structure in the 1950s was simply an "accident of history" that Americans will have to learn to live without.

"Ruthless...Aggression"

"The Soviets are ruthlessly bent on extending their hegemony in virtually every part of the world," Wilson said. "That is today's dispute. They are doing it by violence, by political subversion, by armed aggression, by surrogates in the horn of Africa, in Central America, in the Middle East, and in the Far East."

Although he said he recognized the need for negotiations with the USSR, Wilson criticized those in America who would capitulate to the Russians without a struggle.

"They (Soviet leaders) feel that Americans in their love affair with peace, in our democratic idealism, will make the same mistake in history," he said. "They are hoping that Americans will be the people to most recently engage in that most bitter of ironies: that those who will not face aggression make it inevitable that they will suffer it."

"Deterioration of Education"

A few moments later and across town at SDSU, Halberstam, who won a Pulitzer Prize for his reporting from Vietnam in 1964, told his audience that the United States' biggest challenge will come not from abroad but from deterioration of the American system of education.

"Today as you graduate there are people again unmindful of history who would hope to have some form of American involvement in Central America," Halberstam said. "To them it will again be capitalism versus communism. Though capitalism has never touched in any way the people involved, the peasants of these nations, the true wretched of the earth, that does not matter to them. They would fit the world to American specifications and do what they please... And they, as those before them, would fail."

Halberstam contended that the position of power which the United States occupied in the 1950s was a temporary phenomenon brought on by the destruction of much of the rest of the world during World War II.

"We were careless with that affluence. It was an extraordinary time. First every family had one car, then two cars and a house in the suburbs. Then a boat. And we began to believe that that 40 years of... poor people's ends were nil."

unparalleled affluence, that which was a historical accident, we began to perceive it as a permanent condition.”

But the rest of the world has spent the past 40 years catching up with America, Halberstam said, while this country has forgotten the value of a strong system of public education.

“A critical part of the American Dream—that no matter how simple your own origins in life, if you worked hard your children would do better—that critical part is now in jeopardy. Do not in 20 years think it is a surprise that as we were rotten at the core of our educational system we produced an America that could no longer compete with peoples whose soil is less bountiful than ours.”
ABUSED SUBSTANCES — Those interested in learning more about substance abuse can hear Dr. Thomas Moore, operations coordinator of the Naval Alcohol Safety Action Program at the University of Arizona, in San Diego June 2. Moore's talk is part of a series of Awareness Hour monthly lectures. The meeting will be held from 10 a.m. to noon in University of San Diego's DeSales Hall, Solomon lecture facility. No reservations are necessary.

Moore will discuss prevention of substance abuse problems and training professionals for the substance abuse field, as well as program management and evaluation of alcohol programs.
VATICAN PAINTINGS ON VIEW — Eight of 91 historic paintings of the Vatican by Vernon Howe Bailey will be on view at a preview reception June 4 at the Helen K. and James S. Copley Library of the University of San Diego. The collection was donated to USD in 1983 by Mr. and Mrs. Roy Edwards of Lomas Santa Fe. Bailey was the first artist to receive papal permission to depict the private areas of the Vatican. The watercolors and sepia drawings which resulted from his 1932 Vatican residence are described as “historically unique as well as artistically appealing.” Highlighting the reception will be a special presentation describing the collection and the introduction of a limited edition folio of eight reproductions which will be available to collectors. Further information about the reception, collection and reproductions can be obtained by contacting Dr. Gilbert L. Brown Jr., special assistant to the USD president, at 291-6480, extension 4523.
Jim Brovell congratulates USD players after an emotional victory over St. Mary's that sent the Toreros into the NCAA Division I basketball playoffs earlier this year. Shortly after USD's NIT appearance, Brovell resigned to accept the task of rebuilding the one-proud basketball program at USF.

Fruits of his labor

During his 11-year tenure as head basketball coach at USD, Jim Brovell claims he never was approached by a big-name athlete from a big-name university who wanted to transfer to his humble digs. What Brovell and the university had to offer — in the way of tradition or in a young program — just wasn't enough to lure some monstrous talent who wasn't receiving the proper nourishment at a basketball factory.

And yet yesterday, as he sat in his old office above the USD gym, Brovell fielded two telephone calls within an hour from athletes currently scholarshiped elsewhere who were interested in either Brovell or his program. One caller, with apparently little awe for the Golden Dome or Digger Phelps, was from Notre Dame. Brovell could only chuckle. "Is this unbelievable?" he asked. "Eleven years here and nothing happens. Now, all of a sudden, I'm getting calls from guys at Notre Dame."

Alas, the callers hardly were interested in USD basketball. No, they were inquiring about the program at the University of San Francisco, which Brovell has been nominated to run. The coach, who took USD to the NCAA tournament this spring and a short time later accepted the USF position, is in such good graces at Alcala Park that he still is allowed the run of his old office when he's in town. It will be mid-June before Hank Egan, his replacement, moves in.

Brovell's task is unique in the history of college basketball. He has been asked to resurrect the program at USF, a famous one when wracked by scandal in the late 1970s and suddenly closed for repair in the early 1980s. On April 2, he made the decision to leave USD — a program that he created from nothing — and return to his alma mater, now nothing more than a glop of clay in need of remodeling.

How many men have been placed in similar positions? Does a Kentucky close its basketball doors and reopen them three years later? Does Kansas? Or UCLA? USF, the school of 60 consecutive victories, is in that company. The likes of Bill Russell, K.C. Jones, Phil Woolpert, Bill Cartwright and Phil Smith have walked through those doors. This was a program with history for a rider.

Brovell: No fast break for USF
Ex-USD coach says he'll resist quick fix for program

But when USF decided that it was going in a guy from here and, when he's through, he might stay in the community and maybe help the university. Get a guy from back East and he'll play ball a couple of years and then it's 'see you later.'

Brovelli refuses to be pressured. His philosophy — as it was at USD — is to work from the ground up. These calls from transfers are flattering, but he doesn't want a team of malcontents — which so many transfers are — even though he is in a natural position to accept them.

"Sure," he said. "There's no basketball at USF next year (1984-85), when transfers would have to redshirt, anyway. And then, when we do start up, they won't have anyone to beat out. There are two different types of transfers — the malcontents, and the solid guy who may be homesick or want to change his major to something his current university may not provide. I'm going to be very selective with transfers."

"The boosters are asking me about transfers all the time. They're so enthusiastic. . . They want to be a success right away. Their response has been incredible. But I've told them that I'm not going to change my philosophy. I'm not a believer in the instant fix that transfers provide. I'm not going to bring in six transfers so I can win the first year. It takes longer, the way I do it."

He has more than a year to think about it. How many coaches are awarded the luxury handed Brovelli? His job in the next 18 months is to scout high school and junior college players to recruit for 1985-86. There will be no coaching by one of the nation's more respected tutors of the game.

"It will be like a sabbatical — basically all recruiting, along with some PR work with the boosters," Brovelli said. "Maybe every coach should have this opportunity. If everyone was given a year away from it, maybe there wouldn't be so much burnout among coaches."

"The enthusiasm has been rekindled at USF, but I want them to know what I'm about . . . how I intend to do it. We're going to do it my way. No exceptions!"

Show features Irish quilts

The International Quilt Exhibit/Symposium, to be held June 1-4 on the University of San Diego campus, will host an exhibit of 15 quilts from The Patchwork Artists Guild of Ireland. Evelyn Montague will be bringing the quilts and giving the keynote speech on Thursday, May 31.

Fiona Denham and Grania McElligott will also be there, representing the Irish Patchwork Society. They will be giving the dinner lecture Friday, June 1, and will bring 10 traditional and contemporary quilts to display.

The International Quilt Exhibit/Symposium will be awarding an antique cut crystal bowl valued at $250 to the best quilt with Irish influence. In addition to the quilts, the Irish Patchwork Society will also be bringing a collection of antique and handmade laces typical of the cottage industry laces made in Ireland.

HENRY EGAN HAS been named as head mens basketball coach at the University of San Diego.

A graduate of the Naval Academy, Egan has spent 13 years as head basketball coach at the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs. He is currently alternate coach to the United States Olympic basketball team.

Egan also coached and evaluated players at the Olympic try-outs in Bloomington, Indiana, and will be scouting South American teams in San Paolo, Brazil, this month.

He is a member of the Legislative Commission of the National Coaches Basketball Association of America, and was one of 10 coaches selected by the NCAA to a committee studying the strengthening the academic requirements of intercollegiate athletes.
WASHINGTON — AWARD... White House counselor Edwin Meese's qualifications to be attorney general are being intensely scrutinized, but one legal group thinks he's done a good job.

The National District Attorneys Association recently gave Meese a meritorious service award for his service in the criminal justice field, including a stint as head of the Criminal Justice Center at the University of San Diego.

Sheryl Anne Lorey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank C. Lorey, and Edward Tracy McAtee were married April 14 at La Jolla Presbyterian Church. The bride earned her bachelor's and master's degrees at the University of San Diego, where she is secretary of graduate admissions. The bridegroom is an engineering draftsman with General Dynamics, Convair Division. He is a graduate of Cuyamaca College and currently attends National University.
Schenk: Top credentials, but also some obstacles...

on it didn’t stand out with red lights.

"Obviously the streamlining of the environmental review process went too far, but the point is to this day they have not turned a tablespoon full of dirt to advance that project.

Her opposition to the coastal route is "complete and strong," she says, and blames her opponents of trying to use "a nice, soft way of attacking me."

Bob Bonde, head of the anti-bullet train United Citizens Coastal Protective League, says that through his conversations with Schenk he is convinced she will fight against the project.

Many locally have already pushed the bullet train issue aside and are enthusiastically backing Schenk, who they see as someone with credentials so impressive she seems almost overqualified for the $55,000-a-year supervisor post.

Schenk, 39, might be described as the classic overachiever.

She was born in the Bronx into a family headed by two Hungarian immigrants who spoke no English. Schenk herself did not begin to speak English until she was school-aged, but quickly made up for her handicap and excelled scholastically.

Her family moved to Los Angeles when she was 14 and a few years later she enrolled at UCLA. To finance her education she worked as a telephone operator, and did the same when she enrolled in law school at the University of San Diego.

Following graduation and after a year at the London School of Economics she went to work as a prosecutor in the state attorney general's office. A year later she joined SDG&E as a corporate lawyer.

In 1976 she was appointed a White House fellow and worked under vice presidents Nelson Rockefeller and Walter Mondale. She joined Gov. Jerry Brown's administration in 1978 as deputy secretary of Business, Transportation and Housing and two years later took over the agency.

"Schenk is really unique," said local attorney Dwight Worden, who is supporting her. "She has background, skills and experience that we've never had on the Board of Supervisors."

"I was inclined at one point to think of her as an elitist snob," admits Solana Beach's Gemma Parks, a moderate Republican who was torn between two Democrats, Pent and Schenk. "But she worked well in small groups to convince me otherwise."

Parks, a former county planning commissioner with intimate knowledge of the county process, said what convinced her to go with Schenk was her perception of county government.

"I liked her feeling that government is not a business and doesn't produce a product, but should be efficient and provide a service," Parks said. "Adding that Schenk's experience in other areas - she's been a county commissioner - would be an asset to the Board of Supervisors."

"The county is losing out on money and she knows people up there. I don't care that she's a Democrat. I'm just selfish enough to want the money for our coastline."

Other local Schenk supporters include Del Mar attorneys John Blake, Michael Cottrell and Milton Friedman. Del Mar Fair Board members Quinn Martin, Byron Georgiou, Jim Mulvaney and Hugh Friedman (Schenk's husband); and Cindi Townsend, Gail Paparian, Al Hoan, Jack Peek, Pete Zovany, Sandy Atkinson and Dick Fletcher.

On the issue, Schenk's responses have the familiar ring of those by the other candidates running in the Third District. A regional approach to growth management is favored, preferably one that channels growth to other districts.

"All the growth can't happen in the Third District," she said. "If we have to funnel it to areas that are under-utilized that already have the supporting structures (such as bus lines and sewers)."

"The General Plan came out in 1978 so that means it was based on 1976, 1977 numbers. That's pre-Prop. 13 and so the numbers are all invalid. Add to that the all the amendments that have been allowed and what we have is a patchwork of problems.

"I want to take bold of that General Plan. go back to some of its basic underlying concepts which I think are pretty good, update some of the assumptions, and then stick to it."

"I'm opposed to these large wholesale amendments to the General plan."

She also believes that residents in the San Diego area are receiving less than their share of county services for the taxes they pay, and proposes to open a North County office that would serve her Third District constituents in this area.

"I think it's more than symbolic that a person in this area has to pay toll charges to reach their public officials. I want to have an office that is fully staffed by a high-level person and an office I would spend time in... And not one on Miramar Road or UTC, but right here."

— Lynn Schenk

I think it's more than symbolic that a person in this area has to pay toll charges to reach their public officials. I want to have an office that is fully staffed by a high-level person and an office I would spend time in... And not one on Miramar Road or UTC, but right here."

Schenk early in the campaign, also pledged to upgrade the Sheriff's Department in the area by adding more patrol units. In conjunction with her strongly worded statement, in which she called in response times "unacceptable," she picked up the endorsement of Sheriff John Duffy, a Republican.

That leads to the latest criticism of Schenk that she is "masquerading as a Republican" in order to pick up GOP votes in a district where members of that party number 102,195 and Democrats number 97,529.

One anonymously mailed flyer entitled "The Tale of Two Jerrys" points to repeated mentions of President Gerald Ford in her campaign literature, while her material seldom mentions her association with former Gov. Brown.

Another criticism often raised by opponents is the money she has raised at parties outside of San Diego and from non San Diego residents.

She says she anticipated the criticism and says she tries "to point out to people that Gov. Brown is not in the race."

As for the out-of-town money, she calls it the "cleanest kind of money there is," because those who give it to her are generally removed from San Diego problems and are unlikely to try to call in favors.

"They contribute because they know me," she says. "We have a close alumni association of White House fellows and anytime one of us runs for office the money rolls in."
SCHENK: TOP CREDENTIALS
But former state official has some obstacles

By FRANK MICKADEIT

If a sizable number of people here feel the bullet train is the most hated and feared thing to threaten the peaceful lifestyle of North Coast in some time, then, naturally, those who helped bring the bullet train here must be held in contempt to a degree as well.

So if a candidate for office here played a role in allowing the bullet train to sidestep certain regulations so the project could be sped up, what kind of chances would that candidate have?

It's easy to see the obstacle Third District supervisorial candidate Lynn Schenk has to hurdle to win over coastal voters.

Although she opposes the project now, Schenk, as Gov. Jerry Brown's secretary of Business, Transportation and Housing, appeared to be an enthusiastic supporter of the bullet train when it was first proposed by American High Speed Rail, calling it "breath-taking" and "revolutionary.

Both of her opponents in the race, Deputy District Attorney Michael Pent and former Deputy Secretary of Business, Transportation and Housing Susan Golding, don't hesitate to point out this fact as they try to woo voters here.

Golding last week said: "She was the person that shepherded it through the Legislature behind closed doors. She's the one that took American High Speed Rail around and introduced them to everybody."

What happened on the floor of the Legislature in 1982 that allowed AHSR to gain public bond financing and eliminated some environmental steps is fairly well known: AHSR officials, operating through powerful Assembly Transportation Committee Chairman Bruce Kaunig, D-Norwalk, brought up the implementing bill during the final hectic days of the legislative session and legislators, anxious to go home, passed it easily.

There was only a cursory public hearing on the matter and many legislators said later they had no idea of the implications of the measure when they voted for it.

Schenk's explanation of her early support is along those same lines.

She said she was always "under the general impression" that the train would run along Interstate 5 through San Diego County and therefore saw none of the environmental pitfalls that were brought up when it was learned the train would take a route closer to the coast.

Furthermore, she says, when she had wanted to study high-speed rail possibilities in the state, the legislature stopped her by inserting language into her transportation budget forbidding Caltrans from spending any money or staff time to do such a study.

"To be sure I met with American High Speed Rail, they had a project: we talked about it a great deal," Schenk said. "We, meaning the administration, were generally supportive of the concept, but we didn't have a lot of specific information.

"The only thing we had in the early days was the notion that it would go between San Diego and Los Angeles, plus they were seeking a bonding authority, plus that they wanted some sort of streamlining of the environmental process because they didn't want to have to go through the same review with every community along the route."

She was concerned herself, she said, because "here I am with a proposal to put a big train project on the interstate but I am shackled from using my engineers at Caltrans, my technical people from studying this project because of that budget control language.

"The point is that specific piece of legislation didn't mention the route... In the scheme of everything that was going on..."
EIGHT OF 91 HISTORIC paintings of the Vatican by artist Vernon Howe Bailey will be the centerpiece of a special preview reception to be held Monday in USD's Helen K. and James S. Copley Library.

The full collection of 91 paintings was donated to USD in 1983 by Mr. and Mrs. Roy Edwards of, Lomas Santa Fe. Bailey was the first artist to receive papal permission to depict the private areas of the Vatican, and the watercolors and sepia drawings which resulted from his 1932 Vatican residency are described as "historically unique as well as artistically appealing."

People interested in obtaining further information about the collection and the folio of reproductions should contact Gilbert L. Brown Jr., special assistant to USD's president, at 291-6480, ext. 4523.

Eight of 91 historic paintings of the Vatican by artist Vernon Howe Bailey will be the centerpiece of a special preview reception to be held in the Helen K. and James S. Copley Library of the University of San Diego on June 4.

The full collection of 91 paintings was donated to the University of San Diego in 1983 by Mr. and Mrs. Roy Edwards of Solana Beach. Bailey was the first artist to receive papal permission to depict the private areas of the Vatican, and the watercolors and sepia drawings which resulted from his 1932 Vatican residency are described as "historically unique as well as artistically appealing."

Among the highlights of the reception is a special presentation describing the collection and the introduction of a limited edition folio of eight reproductions which will be made available to collectors.

Anyone who is interested in obtaining further information about the collection and the folio of reproductions may contact Dr. Gilbert Brown Jr., special assistant to the president at USD, 291-6480, extension 4523.
Bob Simmons, 56, a University of San Diego law professor for 12 years, leads a four-way race for the Democratic nomination in the 41st U.S. Congressional district. Newly redrawn, the parameters include the coastal area from Solana Beach south to Point Loma, inland from San Carlos to Rancho Santa Fe.

Among his supporters are state Sen. Wadie Deddeh, Assemblypersons Lucy Killea and Peter Chacon, Deputy Mayor Mike Gotch, and former Rep. Lionel Van Deerlin. Other endorsements include California Committee on Political Education, National Women's Political Caucus, and the La Jolla, Kensington, Mesa and San Diego Democratic clubs.

"In San Diego, only 2 percent of rental housing is within the affordable range for seniors," he said in position paper. "Rising rental rates and conversions are squeezing seniors out of the area."

Simmons supports medicare reform, and Federal regulation of nursing homes to eliminate excessive charges and coercive financial arrangements. He would also work for legislation mandating a percentage of affordable housing in all federally subsidized residential developments.

In January, 1977, Simmons lost his sight as a result of a rare virus that attacked the retina of his eyes. Within three weeks, however, he was back in the classroom at USD, where he had taught since 1972. Currently he resides in San Carlos, with his wife, Dolores, and four of his five sons.
Some of the mysteries of the brain were explored yesterday during the first meeting of the President's Council of Scripps Clinic and Research Foundation in La Jolla.

The council, organized this spring by the clinic's Board of Trustees, heard three Scripps researchers briefly describe some of their work.

Dr. Floyd Bloom, who specializes in the brain's chemistry, told the group about some of his research with the brain's natural painkillers, the endorphins. He also explained how some members of his research team are exploring the impact of alcohol on a tiny section of the brain important for selective attention called the locus ceruleus.

Dr. Michael Oldstone, a member of the Scripps' department of immunology, described how some viruses may be implicated in behavior disorders and mental retardation. In the future, he plans on showing how specific viruses may interfere with unique brain messengers called neurotransmitters.

Dr. Donald J. Dalessio, chairman of the department of medicine, described briefly how the technological boom during the past decade has revolutionized medicine's ability to diagnose neurological diseases.

The President's Council was set up to provide a regular source of unrestricted funds to the institution and to share information about its biomedical research and patient care activities with community leaders.

Helen K. Copley, publisher of The San Diego Union and chairman of the Copley Press, is chairman of the council and heads its organizing committee. Others on the committee are James H. Berglund of La Jolla, James R. Ridgeway of Rancho Santa Fe, William F. Black, president of La Jolla Properties, and John Wilson Brown, a San Diego attorney.
SDSU’s dean of education leaving post

Dr. Dennis Gooler, 41, who, as dean of San Diego State University’s College of Education reorganized and modernized its structure, has announced his resignation.

He will be leaving SDSU at the end of this month to become dean of Northern Illinois University’s College of Education in DeKalb, west of Chicago.

“It’s with mixed feelings that I’m leaving,” he said yesterday. “I’ve enjoyed my stay here, and I hope I made some contribution to the College of Education.

“But the opportunity at Northern Illinois University is excellent. Its College of Education is one of the largest in the country. It prepares most of the teachers for schools in the northern part of the state.”

Gooler also cited personal and family reasons for leaving SDSU, but declined to be specific.

He is best known at the university for streamlining and modernizing the College of Education, an extensive reorganization completed last December.

“I was trying to get the college reorganized in a way that would best prepare it for the future demands that would be made upon it,” he said.

Gooler also was active in tightening requirements for students attempting to enter the teaching profession.

He was chairman of the California State University system’s committee to examine the basic skills tests that teaching candidates must pass before they are given their teaching credentials.

Gooler came to SDSU in July 1982 from Syracuse University, where he was director of development for its school of education. He had received his doctorate in educational psychology from the University of Illinois, Urbana.

An SDSU spokesman said an acting dean of the college would be named shortly, and a search would get under way to find a permanent replacement for Gooler.
