"Accounting: A Short Course for Lawyers" will be sponsored jointly by the University of San Diego's School of Law and the San Diego Bar Association from September 23 to October 23 at the Executive Hotel, 1055 First Avenue. The course will be taught in ten evening sessions on Tuesday and Thursday from 6 to 8 p.m.

Teaching the course will be Dr. Arthur Brodshatz, a Certified Public Accountant with Steres, Alpert & Came. He also serves on the business faculty at San Diego State University.

The course is designed to familiarize attorneys with those basic accounting and auditing procedures which will be most helpful in the legal profession. Among other areas, the sessions will include: financial statement preparation and analysis, comparisons of different accounting systems, auditing and other CPA firm services, managerial accounting versus financial accounting, and the use of auditing/accounting knowledge in litigation.

USD's Department of Continuing Education plans a subsequent accounting course in 1981, from February 3 to March 5. Future workshops are also planned in a "Litigation Assistance" series.

A fee of $150 per person is charged for the current course, with a group rate of $130 per person applicable to firms sending more than one participant.

Advance registration is requested; for more information call 293-4585.
