Background: American Humanics is a nationwide organization specializing in educating leaders in youth-voluntary agency careers. It was founded in 1949 by H. Roe Bartle, the late mayor of Kansas City, Mo. and former Boy Scout executive, who recognized the community's need for competence in the administration of youth agencies. Today, the organization works through a unique partnership with fifteen colleges and universities throughout the nation. The educational institution provides the curriculum for the education of agency leaders, and American Humanics provides the co-curricular program. Field trips to youth agency activities and facilities, workshops conducted by agency executives, summer employment placement, internships to provide on-the-job training, and other similar opportunities are afforded by the co-curricular program.

San Diego hosts for the meeting are American Humanics board members Mr. and Mrs. George M. Pardee, Jr., honorary co-chairmen, and attorney Dan Henry, retired Boy Scouts of America executive, host chairman.

Mr. O'Brian was selected as featured speaker because of his personal interest in youth and because of the common concerns for youth development shared by American Humanics and the Hugh O'Brian Youth Foundation (HOBY).
